Introduction to statistical software (which will be used throughout the course). Descriptive statistics; elementary probability theory; discrete and continuous probability models; principles of statistical inference; Simple linear regression and correlation analysis.

MAT 148 or MAT 151 or MAT 155 or MAT 161 or MAT 171 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 349
APPLIED STATISTICAL METHODS II
Undergraduate
A continuation of Mathematics 348. Multiple regression; analysis of frequency data, ANOVA and some experimental designs; nonparametric inference and time series analysis. Use of statistical software.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 348 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 351
PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS I
Undergraduate
Probability spaces, combinatorial probability methods, discrete and continuous random variables and distributions, moment generating functions, development and applications of the classical discrete and continuous distributions.

MAT 261 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 352
PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS II
Undergraduate
Joint probability distributions and correlation; law of large numbers and the central limit theorem; sampling distributions and theory of estimation.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 351 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.
A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 352 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 354
MULTIVARIATE STATISTICS
Undergraduate
The multivariate normal distribution. Hypothesis tests on means and variances including the multivariate linear model. Classification using the linear discriminant function. Principal components and factor analysis. PREREQUISITE(S): MAT 353 and 262, or consent of instructor.
(CROSS-LISTED WITH MAT 454)
MAT 262 and MAT 353 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 355
STOCHASTIC PROCESSES
Undergraduate
MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 356
APPLIED REGRESSION ANALYSIS
Undergraduate
Simple linear, multiple, polynomial and general regression models. Selection of best regression equation and examination of residuals for homoscedasticity and other diagnostics. Use of statistical software. Cross-listed with MAT 456.
MAT 353 and (MAT 220 or MAT 262) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 357
NONPARAMETRIC STATISTICS
Undergraduate
MAT 349 or MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 358
APPLIED TIME SERIES AND FORECASTING
Undergraduate
Development of the Box-Jenkins methodology for the identification, estimation, and fitting of ARIMA, and transfer-function stochastic models for the purpose of analyzing and forecasting stationary, non-stationary, and seasonal time series data. The course emphasizes practical time-series data analysis using computer packages and includes applications to economic, business, and industrial forecasting. Cross-listed with MAT 512.
MAT 341 and MAT 353 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 359
SIMULATION MODELS AND MONTE CARLO METHOD
Undergraduate
Techniques of computer simulation of the classical univariate and multivariate probability distribution models, and such random processes as random walk, Markov chains, and queues. Cross-listed with MAT 459.
MAT 341 and MAT 353 are a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 361
ACTUARIAL SCIENCE I
Undergraduate
The Theory of Interest: Theory and applications of compound interest to annuities, amortization schedules, sinking funds, bonds, and yield rates. Cross-listed with MAT 461.

MAT 149 or MAT 152 or MAT 156 or MAT 162 is a prerequisite and MAT 351 is a corequisite for this class.

MAT 362
ACTUARIAL SCIENCE II
Undergraduate
Basic Contingencies: The theory and applications of contingency mathematics in life and health insurance, annuities, and pensions from both a probabilistic and a deterministic viewpoint. Topics include survival distribution and life tables, life insurance, and life annuities. Cross-listed with MAT 462.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 361 or instructor permission is a prerequisite and MAT 352 is a corequisite for this class.

MAT 363
ACTUARIAL SCIENCE III
Undergraduate

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 362 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 364
STOCHASTIC RISK MODELS
Undergraduate
Distributional quantities, distribution properties and classification, frequency and severity models, aggregate loss and ruin models. Cross-listed with MAT 464.

MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 365
STOCHASTIC SURVIVAL MODELS
Undergraduate
Construction of parametric and nonparametric models, model validation and selection, credibility theory, simulation techniques. Cross-listed with MAT 465.

MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 366
MATHEMATICAL DEMOGRAPHY
Undergraduate
Introduction to demography; mortality table construction and methods of population and demographic analysis.

MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 367
CREDIBILITY THEORY
Undergraduate
Credibility theory and loss distributions with applications to casualty insurance classification and rate making. Cross-Listed As MAT 467.

MAT 362 is a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 368
MATHEMATICAL FINANCE
Undergraduate
Financial derivatives, risk management, investment strategies, arbitrage, valuation, Put-call parity, the binomial model, option pricing, lognormal models for asset prices, Black-Scholes formula, value at risk and conditional tail expectation, Brownian motion and Ito's lemma, interest rate models. Cross-listed with MAT 468.

MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 370
ADVANCED LINEAR ALGEBRA
Undergraduate
Vector spaces, basis and dimension; matrix representation of linear transformations and change of basis; diagonalization of linear operators; inner product spaces; diagonalization of symmetric linear operators, principal-axis theorem, and applications. Cross-listed MAT 470.

MAT 262 and (a grade of C-minus or better in MAT 215 or MAT 141) or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 372
LOGIC AND SET THEORY
Undergraduate
Topics in axiomatic set theory, formal logic, and computability theory.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 215 or MAT 141, or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 381
FOURIER ANALYSIS AND SPECIAL FUNCTIONS
Undergraduate
The course covers the basic principles of discrete and continuous Fourier analysis and some of its applications currently used in scientific modeling. Students will use the computer to implement the computational algorithms developed in the course. Some of the topics covered will include Fourier transforms and their application to signal and image processing, discrete Fourier series, the fast Fourier transform algorithm and applications to digital filtering, and the Radon transforms and its applications to tomography.

MAT 262 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 384
MATHEMATICAL MODELING
Undergraduate
Modeling of real world problems using mathematical methods. Includes a theory of modeling and a study of specific models, selected from deterministic, stochastic, continuous, and discrete models. Cross-listed with MAT 484.

(MAT 220 or MAT 262) and (MAT 348 or MAT 351) are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 385
NUMERICAL ANALYSIS I
Undergraduate

(MAT 262 or MAT 220), (MAT 149 or MAT 152 or MAT 156 or MAT 162 or MAT 172) and a programming course required as part of the Math Core Curriculum or consent of instructor are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 386
NUMERICAL ANALYSIS II
Undergraduate
Theory and algorithms for efficient computation, including the Fast Fourier transform, numerical solution of non-linear systems of equations. Minimization of functions of several variables. Sparse systems of equations and corresponding eigenvalue problems. (CROSS-LISTED WITH MAT 486 & CSC 386/486)

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 385 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 387
OPERATIONS RESEARCH I: LINEAR PROGRAMMING
Undergraduate
The Linear Programming problem and its dual; the simplex method; transportation and warehouse problems; computer algorithms and applications to various fields. (CROSS-LISTED AS MAT 487)

(MAT 262 or 220) and (any introductory programming course) are prerequisites for this course.

MAT 388
OPERATIONS RESEARCH II: OPTIMIZATION THEORY
Undergraduate
Integer programming; non-linear programming; dynamic programming; queuing theory; game theory. (CROSS-LISTED AS MAT 488)

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 387 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 389
OPERATIONS RESEARCH III
Undergraduate Advanced Topics.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 388 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 390
MATHEMATICS READING AND RESEARCH
Undergraduate
The course provides students with a hands-on experience about research in mathematical sciences. Students attend seminars and research colloquia, and actively participate at discussions about the topics presented. Students reflect on the connections between various areas of modern mathematics, the challenges of structuring and solving problems, and the personal experience of doing mathematics. As a final project, each student prepares and presents a mathematical expository paper describing a current area of research, emphasizing its relevance to mathematics in general and its connections to real world problems. This course may be used to satisfy the junior-year experiential learning (JYEL) requirement.

MAT 391
STUDIES IN DEMOGRAPHY
Undergraduate
The course introduces students to the study by statistical methods of human populations in terms of type of data sources, population composition, growth, fertility, mortality, morbidity, health, migration, and urbanization. In addition, the course has a major component that emphasizes the study of current characteristics of the populations of developing countries in comparison with some developed countries including the United States of America. Students are required to present and submit a research project with comparative analysis of demographic statistics obtained on several developing and developed countries.

MAT 395
TOPICS IN MATHEMATICS
Undergraduate
Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change. Variable credit allowed.

MAT 396
SENIOR THESIS RESEARCH
Undergraduate
A thesis option is available to mathematics majors who wish to pursue an extended independent project related to a theoretical or applied focus of the program. Students would work under the guidance of a faculty mentor. A total of 4 credits must be completed over the one or two quarters prior to the thesis submission. Interested students are strongly encouraged to enroll in MAT 390 during their junior year.
MAT 397
MATHEMATICAL PEDAGOGY: THEORY & PRACTICE
Undergraduate
Introduction to current theories and practices in college mathematics instruction; helps undergraduate mathematics majors develop a deeper understanding of fundamental mathematical concepts and an awareness of how people learn mathematical ideas, and prepares them to work as consultants in mathematics instruction. Mathematical tutoring practicum is required. Four credit hour course offered over a two quarter span during the autumn and winter quarters only. See instructor for further information. This course maybe used to satisfy the junior experiential learning requirement, but it does not count toward mathematics major or minor credit. Cross-listed with MAT 697.

MAT 398
SENIOR CAPSTONE SEMINAR
Undergraduate
Topics vary from year to year. This course does not count toward the mathematical major or minor credit.

MAT 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
Variable credit.

MAT 400
APPLIED ABSTRACT ALGEBRA I
Graduate
Applied Abstract Algebra I

MAT 401
APPLIED ABSTRACT ALGEBRA II
Graduate
Applied Abstract Algebra II

MAT 421
BASIC BIOSTATISTICS
Graduate
This course includes both data analysis and experimental design, up to and including survival analysis such as used in the analysis of clinical trials. The course will be supplemented by standard topics with application areas relevant to drug development, including pharmacokinetics, clinical trials, bioequivalence, and pharmacoepidemiology.

MAT 422
GENE EXPRESSION ANALYSIS
Graduate
In this course, students will build on the principles of MAT 421 by considering experimental design and data analysis issues pertaining to gene expression and genome-wide association studies. Introduction to gene expression studies, multiple comparisons problem in microarray studies, introduction to genome-wide association studies and experimental design for GWAS - one and two-stage approaches will also be addressed.

MAT 400 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 421 and MAT 453 are a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 423
GENOME SEQUENCING
Graduate
The course provides a basic understanding of sequencer-based genetic analyses starting with the basics: what a genome sequencer is, how genome sequences are assembled, and the statistics involved in designing sequencer experiments. The course will also consider typical models of sequence evolution leading into coverage of approaches to sequence alignment and statistical phylogeny along with issues related to biomedical applications, detecting sequence variants, transcriptome and metagenome sequencing, and ChIP-Seq. RNA and protein folding will also be included.

MAT 453 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 434
TOPOLOGY
Graduate
An introduction to point-set topology: metric spaces, topological spaces, continuity, connectedness, and compactness.

ECO 435 or MAT 335 or equivalents is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 435
MEASURE THEORY
Graduate
This is a course in Lebesque integration; the study of measure spaces and measurable functions; the basic theorems of Lebesque integration; Egoroff's theorem, the monotone limit theorem, the Lebesgue dominated convergence theorem; an introduction to Lp spaces, Holder's inequality, Minkowski's inequality; Fubini's theorem.

MAT 336 or MAT 434 is a prerequisite for this class.

FUNCTIONAL ANALYSIS
Graduate
This course is an introduction to the basic theory of functional analysis. Students will study normed, Banach, and Hilbert Spaces and the theory of bounded linear functionals and operators acting on them. The contraction mapping and the fixed point theorem are also studied with applications to sequence and function spaces.

MAT 434 and (MAT 370 or MAT 470) is a prerequisite for this class.

COMPLEX ANALYSIS
Graduate
Course topics: Complex functions; complex differentiation and integration; series and sequences of complex functions. Cross-listed with MAT 337.

MAT 261 and MAT 335 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 441
APPLIED STATISTICS I
Graduate
Parametric and non-parametric statistical inferential methods for the univariate and bivariate situations using SAS. Specific topics include classical and exploratory graphical & numerical methods of data descriptions; inference about means, medians, and associations including analysis of variance and linear regression. Data analytic projects are an integral part of the course.

MAT 441 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 442
APPLIED STATISTICS II
Graduate
A continuation of MAT 441. Repeated measures design, association, analysis of covariance, and multivariate relationships. Diagnostics and model building. Methods of categorical data analysis. Logistical regression and log-linear models. Data analytical projects using SAS are an integral part of the course.

MAT 441 is a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 443
APPLIED STATISTICS III
Graduate

A continuation of MAT 442. The course material generalizes univariate methods of inference to multivariate situations using SAS. Specific topics include canonical correlation, discriminate analysis, principal component analysis, factor analysis, and multivariate analysis of variance. Emphasis in the curse is on data analytic projects.

MAT 442 is a prerequisite for this class.

---

MAT 448
STATISTICAL METHODS USING SAS
Graduate

---

MAT 451
PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS I
Graduate

The course covers elements of probability theory; distributions of random variables and linear functions of random variables; moment generating functions; and discrete and continuous probability models.

MAT 260 is a corequisite for this class.

MAT 452
PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS II
Graduate

MAT 451 is a prerequisite for this class and MAT 261 is a corequisite for this class.

---

MAT 453
PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS III
Graduate

A continuation of MAT 452. More on hypothesis testing, most powerful, uniformly most powerful, and likelihood ratio tests. Introduction to the analysis of variance; linear regression; categorical data analysis, and nonparametric methods of inference.

MAT 452 is a prerequisite for this class.

---

MAT 454
MULTIVARIATE STATISTICS
Graduate

The multivariate normal distribution. The general linear model. Multivariate regression and analysis of variance; discriminant analysis; principal component and factor analysis; applications and use of statistical software. Cross-listed with MAT 354.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

---

MAT 455
STOCHASTIC PROCESSES
Graduate

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 456
APPLIED REGRESSION ANALYSIS
Graduate
Simple linear, multiple, polynomial and general linear regression models. Model diagnostics; Model selection and Validation. Cross-listed with MAT 356.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 457
NONPARAMETRIC STATISTICS
Graduate
Inference concerning location and scale parameters, goodness of fit tests, association analysis and tests of randomness using distribution free procedures. Bootstrap techniques. Smoothing methodologies. Cross-listed with MAT 357.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 458
STATISTICAL QUALITY CONTROL
Graduate
History; Deming guide to quality; graphical techniques of process control; Schewhart's control charts for means, ranges, standard deviations, individual measurements, and attributes; process capabilities and statistical tolerance; cumulative-sum charts. Product liability; acceptance sampling; product and process design; applications and case studies.

MAT 459
SIMULATION MODELS AND MONTE CARLO METHOD
Graduate
Techniques of computer simulation of the classical univariate and multivariate probability models, and such random processes as random walks, Markov chains, and queues. Cross-listed with MAT 359.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 460
TOPICS IN STATISTICS
Graduate
One of the following topics: Clinical trials; Reliability and life testing; Categorical data analysis; Bootstrapping; Data Mining; Response Surface Methodology; Meta analysis; Survival Models.

MAT 453 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 461
ACTUARIAL SCIENCE I: THEORY OF INTEREST
Graduate
Theory of Interest: Theory and application of compound interest to annuities, amortization schedules, sinking funds, bonds, and yield rates. Cross-listed as MAT 361.

MAT 149 or MAT 152 or MAT 162 or MAT 172 is a prerequisite for this class and MAT 451 is a corequisite for this class.

MAT 462
ACTUARIAL SCIENCE II: BASIC CONTINGENCIES
Graduate
Basic Contingencies: The theory and applications of contingency mathematics in life and health insurance annuities and pensions, from both a probabilistic and a deterministic viewpoint. Topics include survival distribution and life tables, life insurance and life annuities. Cross-listed as MAT 362.

MAT 461 is a prerequisite for this class and MAT 452 is a corequisite for this class.
MAT 463
ACTUARIAL SCIENCE III: ADVANCED CONTINGENCIES
Graduate
Advanced Contingencies: A continuation of MAT 462. Topics include net premiums, net premium reserves, multiple life functions, multiple decrement models, and valuation theory for pension plans. Cross-listed with MAT 363.

MAT 464
STOCHASTIC RISK MODELS
Graduate
Introduction to risk theory and applications. Economics of insurance, individual risk models for short-term and single-term, collective risk models over an extended period, and applications. Cross-listed with MAT 364.

MAT 465
STOCHASTIC SURVIVAL MODELS
Graduate
Mathematical methods for population analysis and survival models. Cross-listed with MAT 365.

MAT 466
MATHEMATICAL DEMOGRAPHY
Graduate
Introduction to demography, mortality table construction and methods of population and demographic analysis.

MAT 467
CREDIBILITY THEORY
Graduate
Credibility theory and loss distributions with applications to casualty insurance classification and ratemaking.

MAT 468
MATHEMATICAL FINANCE
Graduate
This course will be required of students in the Financial Mathematics concentration. The main topics will be stochastic calculus and partial differential equations leading up to a derivation of the Black-Scholes option pricing model and its variants, along with discrete methods. This course should also be of interest to students of applied mathematics and physics. There will be opportunity to analyze real option data in conjunction with theory. Possible additional topics would include numerical methods, dividends, options on futures and exotic options. Cross-listed with MAT 368.

MAT 470
ADVANCED LINEAR ALGEBRA
Graduate
Vector spaces, basis and dimension; matrix representation of linear transformations and change of basis; diagonalization of linear operators; inner product spaces; diagonalization of symmetric linear operators, principal-axis theorem, and applications. Cross-listed as MAT 370.

MAT 462 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 471
GROUP THEORY
Graduate
Course topics: Classes of groups; actions of groups on sets; Sylow theorems; decomposition of groups; structure of finite abelian groups.

MAT 472
FIELDS AND GALOIS THEORY
Graduate
Course topics: Commutative rings and fields; irreducible polynomials and field extensions, adjunction of roots, algebraic extensions, splitting and normal fields, cyclic extensions, the Galois group, and the Fundamental theorem of Galois theory. Cross-listed with MAT 312.
(MAT 311 or MAT 473) and MAT 471 are prerequisites for this course.

MAT 473
RINGS AND MODULES
Graduate
Course topics: Rings and Algebras; classes of unique factorization domains; modules and principal isomorphism theorems, classes of modules, decomposition of finitely generated modules; Jordan and rational canonical form of a matrix.
MAT 311 or MAT 471 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 481
FOURIER ANALYSIS AND SPECIAL FUNCTIONS
Graduate
The course covers the basic principles of discrete and continuous Fourier analysis and its applications. Some of the topics covered are Fourier series, discrete Fourier transforms, fast Fourier transforms, and Fourier transforms.
MAT 262 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 484
MATHEMATICAL MODELING
Graduate
Modeling of real world problems using mathematical methods. Includes a theory of modeling and a study of specific models, selected from deterministic stochastic, continuous and discrete models. Cross-listed as MAT 384.
(MAT 220 or MAT 262) and (MAT 451 or MAT 348) are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 485
NUMERICAL ANALYSIS I
Graduate
MAT 220 or MAT 262 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 486
NUMERICAL ANALYSIS II
Graduate
MAT 485 is a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 487
OPERATIONS RESEARCH I: LINEAR PROGRAMMING
Graduate
The linear programming problem and its dual; the simplex method; transportation and warehouse problems; computer algorithms and applications to various fields. Cross-listed with MAT 387.
MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 488
OPERATIONS RESEARCH II: OPTIMIZATION THEORY
Graduate
Integer programming; nonlinear programming; dynamic programming. Cross-listed as MAT 388.
MAT 487 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 489
QUEUING THEORY WITH APPLICATIONS
Graduate
Discrete and continuous-time Markov chain models, Queuing systems, and topics from renewal and reliability theory.
MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 494
GRAPH THEORY AND NETWORK FLOWS
Graduate

MAT 495
DYNAMIC PROGRAMMING
Graduate

MAT 496
GAME THEORY
Graduate
The minimax theorem for two-person, zero-sum games. Two-person general-sum games and noncooperative person games; Nash equilibrium.

MAT 498
PROBLEM SOLVING IN MATHEMATICS
Graduate
Course topics: problem solving in various topics from GRE Subject examination in Mathematics. Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change.

MAT 512
APPLIED TIME SERIES AND FORECASTING
Graduate
Development of the Box-Jenkins methodology for the identification, estimation and fitting of ARIMA, and transfer-function stochastic models for the purpose of analyzing and forecasting stationary, non-stationary, and seasonal time series data. The course emphasizes practical time series data analysis, using computer packages and includes applications to economic, business and industrial forecasting.
MAT 341 or MAT 348 or MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

Cross-listed as MAT 326.

MAT 527 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 528
DESIGN AND ANALYSIS OF EXPERIMENTS
Graduate
Single-factor fixed, random and mixed designs with and without restrictions on randomizations, including randomized block designs, Latin & Graeco-Latin squares. Factorial and fractional factorial experiments. Nested and split-plot designs. Confounding and response surface methodology.

MAT 527 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 595
GRADUATE THESIS RESEARCH
Graduate
A thesis option is available to graduate students who wish to pursue an extended independent project. Students would work under the guidance of a faculty mentor. A total of 4 credits must be completed over the one or two quarters prior to the thesis submission.

MAT 596
ADVANCED TOPICS IN ALGEBRA
Graduate
Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change.

MAT 597
ADVANCED TOPICS IN ANALYSIS
Graduate
Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change.

MAT 598
ADVANCED PROBLEM SOLVING IN ALGEBRA AND ANALYSIS
Graduate
Course topics: problem solving in various topics in Algebra and Analysis. Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change.

MAT 599
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Offered by arrangement. Approval by department chair required.

MAT 600
EXPERIMENTATION, CONJECTURE, AND REASONING WITH NUMBERS
Graduate
This course will focus on furthering the participants' number sense together with providing them with opportunities to: 1) Use and discuss the roles of experimentation, conjecture, and logical reasoning in developing mathematical understanding; 2) Appreciate the value of algebraic notation in problem solving by comparing solutions done both with and without algebra; 3) Engage in mathematical speaking and writing with discussion of (a) how to evaluate accurate vs. inaccurate statements, (b) what level of detail is appropriate in an answer given the point of the problem, (c) what ways of presenting solutions are suitable for various audiences; 4) Discuss the distinction between "how" a mathematical strategy works and "why" it works, and articulate the pedagogical value of knowing the "why."
MAT 605
GEOMETRY FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS
Graduate
An introduction to geometry designed to engage students in the construction, description, and analysis of geometric objects, including three-dimensional objects. These activities will be used to generate questions and hypotheses that will lead to more abstract concepts and general arguments. Emphasis throughout will be on informal reasoning, experimental methods, inductive as well as deductive arguments, local organization, and the development of mathematical thinking. Appropriate technology will be used to explore hypotheses and support mathematical reasoning. Topics will include: polyhedra, and their nets, cross sections, and projections; triangles, quadrilaterals, and polygons; congruence and similarity; the Pythagorean theorem; perimeter, area, and volume; circles and spheres, symmetry and transformations; and tessellations. The course will also include discussion and reflection on learning mathematics.

MAT 608
INVESTIGATING HIGH SCHOOL MATHEMATICS
Graduate
Drawing on high school mathematics content, students will identify and explore the mathematical themes that might form the content of a 12th grade capstone course. In the process, they will reflect on and discuss the major issues encountered when learning the mathematical concepts that form the basis of high school mathematics, identify ways to collaborate in order to improve mathematics learning, and identify ways in which they can take leadership roles in mathematics teaching and learning.

MAT 609
TEACHING AND LEARNING SECONDARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS
Graduate
Theories, methods, materials and techniques for teaching and learning mathematics in secondary and upper elementary schools. This course is required for students seeking secondary math certification.

MAT 610
CALCULUS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS I
Graduate
A review of topics from precalculus using algebraic, numerical, and graphical perspectives including linear functions, exponential functions, logarithms, polynomials, and trigonometric functions. An introduction to limits, continuity, the derivative, and basic properties of real numbers. Introduction to graphing calculators and free graphing software with applications to classroom teaching.

MAT 611
CALCULUS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS II
Graduate
A continuation of Math 610. The derivative and its applications, including optimization and related rates. Introduction to integration and numerical algorithms using graphing calculators. Offered every Winter.

MAT 612
CALCULUS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS III
Graduate
A continuation of Math 611. Techniques of symbolic and numerical integration with geometric applications. Sequences, series, power series, and Taylor series. Offered every Spring.

MAT 618
TOPICS IN CALCULUS AND DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS
Graduate
Taylor's theorem, parametric equations, slope fields, Euler's method. The second half of the course will look at the history of calculus and the development of ideas such as limits, least upper bounds, convergence of series, countability, and cardinality.

MAT 612 is a prerequisite for this class.
MAT 620
GEOMETRY FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
Axiom systems, types of reasoning used in proofs, Euclidean geometry results with concentration on triangles and circles, introduction to non-Euclidean geometry, and introduction to geometry classroom software. Offered every Spring.

MAT 660 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 621
TRANSITION TO ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS
Graduate
In this course, teachers will begin the study of algebra as a generalization of number and operation, building on their new understanding of those topics from previous courses. Careful attention to reasoning about the use of variables and understanding the logic behind solving equations and inequalities will aid in the transition to a full treatment of high school algebra. Teachers will be introduced to high quality resources that will help them create effective algebraic learning environments for their students.

MAT 600, MMT 401 and MAT 605 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 622
ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS I
Graduate
This course is the first of a 3-quarter sequence designed in part to prepare elementary and middle grade teachers to teach an algebra class to qualified 8th grade students in their schools. It is based on a vision of mathematics instruction throughout the grades that continuously builds students’ algebraic skills and thinking. This first course in the sequence emphasizes problem-solving as an entry point into algebra for mathematics learners. Students see algebra as an active process for solving problems and as arising naturally as a way to generalize the laws of arithmetic, analyze patterns, and describe relationships in tables, graphs, and equations. In addition, students review and examine foundational concepts in algebra (variables, equations, relations, graphs, slopes of lines, and equations of lines) and are introduced to research on the development of algebraic thinking in middle grade students.

MAT 623
ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS II
Graduate
The second course in the algebra sequence builds on the first and maintains emphases on problem-solving, deeper understanding of the central concepts of beginning algebra, and awareness of difficulties students have when encountering the subject for the first time. Topics include systems of linear equations, solving linear inequalities and systems of inequalities, absolute values equations and inequalities, and quadratic functions.

MAT 624
FUNCTIONS AND MODELING
Graduate
Advanced concepts in beginning algebra provide a basis for a deeper treatment of the relationship between functions and data, and lay the groundwork for the development of polynomial, exponential, and logarithmic models. The course will integrate the use of technology such as graphing calculators and spreadsheets.

MAT 631
HISTORY OF MATHEMATICS THROUGH PROBLEM SOLVING FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
Topics include the development of calculus, probability theory, number theory, non-Euclidean geometry, and set theory. Offered every Winter.

MAT 620 and MAT 670 is a prerequisite and MAT 650 is a co-requisite for this class.

MAT 632
HISTORY AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS OF MATHEMATICS
Graduate
This course is a cross-cultural survey of the history of mathematics, with emphasis placed on the development of concepts encountered by students in elementary and middle school. The course will also serve as a capstone for the program in that it will include references to content from all the earlier courses and will explicitly ask teachers to make connections across the middle school mathematics curriculum. The students will complete a small group research project in which they choose a mathematical concept from the program and use it as a focal point to study the development of mathematical ideas across time and across cultures.
MAT 640
MULTIVARIABLE CALCULUS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
Functions of several variables, vectors, dot products and cross products, partial differentiation, directional derivatives, optimization, Lagrange multipliers, polar and spherical coordinates. Use of software packages to illustrate three dimensional objects.

MAT 612 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 641
MULTIVARIABLE CALCULUS WITH LINEAR ALGEBRA FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
Multiple integration, line and surface integrals, change of variable in multiple integration, Green's and Stokes' theorems. An introduction to matrices, determinants, linear transformations, and eigenvalues.

MAT 640 and MAT 671 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 642
MULTIVAR CALC FOR TEACHERS II
Graduate
Line and surface integrals, change of variable in multiple integration, Green's and Stokes' theorems.

MAT 640 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 643
IDEAS OF CALCULUS IN THE MIDDLE SCHOOL CURRICULUM
Graduate
The course will introduce students to the "big ideas" of Calculus including limits, derivatives, and integrals. The course will emphasize how the mathematics in the middle school curriculum can lay a foundation for the study of continuous mathematics and to the role that Calculus plays in the sciences. In particular, direct connections to the topics of this course and the middle school curriculum will be made by studying activities from curriculum materials currently used in CPS that are relevant to the topics of Calculus. Trigonometry from the perspective of the middle school classroom will be used as the launching point for introducing the major ideas of the course. The course will also give the students the opportunity to understand the interplay between the concepts and tools they learned in the MMT 415-417 sequence and Calculus.

MAT 644
DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
This course will continue the study of differential equations (DE?s) begun in MAT 618. Topics include solutions and applications of linear DE?s, second order DE?s with constant coefficients; linear systems: eigenvalues and eigenvectors of matrices, phase portraits and explicit solutions; nonlinear planar systems: linearization and stability analysis.

MAT 618 and MAT 641 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 649
DATA ANALYSIS AND PROBABILITY
Graduate
This course covers the fundamental concepts of probability that are part of the middle school curriculum and recent research findings on student learning of probability and classroom implications of this research. In addition, it covers the principles of graphically displaying, collecting and analyzing data with and without the use of technology. Topics will include measures of central tendency and dispersion, graphical representations of data (histograms, boxplots, bar charts, pie charts, and line graphs), and the design of experiments and simulations.

MAT 650
PROBABILITY & STATISTICS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS I
Graduate
Combinatorics, sets, probability, random variables, distribution and density functions, multiple integration, standard probability laws, jointly distributed random variables. Use of graphing calculators, applets, and software packages to illustrate concepts. Offered every Winter.

MAT 640 and MAT 660 are prerequisites for this course.
MAT 651
PROBABILITY & STATISTICS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS II
Graduate
Central limit theorem, point and interval estimation of parameters, hypothesis testing, least squares and regression. Offered every Spring.
MAT 650 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 660
DISCRETE STRUCTURES FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
Logic and proof, number theory, sequences and mathematical induction, sets and functions, cardinality recursion, and introduction to combinatorics.

MAT 665
DISCRETE STRUCTURES WITH A TRANSITION TO HIGHER MATHEMATICS
Graduate
A transition to advanced courses having a greater emphasis on proof and abstraction. Techniques of proof, logic, sets and functions, number theory, recursive sequences, mathematical induction, and an introduction to combinatorics.

MAT 670
ABSTRACT ALGEBRA FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
Examines the integers, prime numbers, the Euclidean algorithm, the uniqueness of prime factorization, equivalence relations, rational numbers, real numbers, and complex numbers. Provides examples of groups, rings, and fields and also covers the Fundamental Theorem of Algebra, modular arithmetic, and roots of polynomials of small degree. Offered every Summer.
MAT 660 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 671
ABSTRACT AND LINEAR ALGEBRA FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
A continuation of Math 670. Examines the irreducibility of polynomials, criteria for solvability by radicals, rational values of trigonometric functions, difference functions, partial fraction decomposition, and geometric constructions with ruler and compass. Also examines linear independence, spanning sets, and the basis of a vector space. Along with Math 670, it provides the theoretical foundation for many topics covered in high school mathematics courses. Offered every Fall.
MAT 670 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 672
LINEAR ALGEBRA FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS
Graduate
An introduction to matrices, determinants, linear transformations, and eigenvalues.
MAT 671 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 680
REAL ANALYSIS FOR CALCULUS TEACHERS
Graduate
Construction and properties of the real numbers. Proofs of essential results from calculus such as the intermediate value theorem, extreme value theorem, mean value theorem, existence of the Riemann integral, and Taylor's theorem.
MAT 618 and MAT 660 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 699
TOPICS IN MATHEMATICS FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Diverse topics in mathematical modeling or mathematical appreciation germane to the secondary school classroom.
This course examines the history of cinema as one of the most influential cultural forms of the 20th Century. We will study the aesthetic and technological developments of cinema during its first 50 years, as well as examine the social and economic factors shaping its history. Initially influenced by other art forms (theater, literature, painting) filmmaking quickly acquired its own formal system, language, and traditions. We will trace the changing styles, techniques, content, and methods of filmmaking as an art form, as popular culture, and as an industry. We will consider how cinema is bound to its social context via audience relations, economics, technology, and ideology. The limited scope of this course will cover primarily feature-length, narratives films as the dominant mode of filmmaking, although we will also look at the development of documentary and experimental filmmaking. The class will consist of lectures, screenings, and discussions.

This course covers the continued rise and development of cinema from 1945 to 1975. The course will have a dual focus, looking simultaneously at both the American studio system and international cinemas. The lectures, screenings, and discussions place equal emphasis on charting the development of cinematic techniques as well as examining the growth of specific national cinemas. In addition, the course surveys international stylistic trends in narrative, documentary, and avant-garde film. Students will acquire a broad understanding of the institutional, social, technological, and aesthetic forces that have shaped the development of cinema during the mid-twentieth century. Lab for film viewing required.

This final course in the film history sequence is designed to introduce students to a sense of modern film history and the multiple permutations of cinema around the globe. It presents film history from a global perspective, concentrating primarily on the development of new national and transnational cinemas. The course continues to chart the development of the American studios since the mid-1970s while examining the effects of media consolidation and convergence. Moreover, the course seeks to examine how global cinemas have reacted to and dealt with the formal influence and economic domination of Hollywood filmmaking on international audiences. Class lectures, screenings, and discussions will consider how cinema has changed from a primarily national phenomenon to a transnational form of communication in the 21st century.

This course examines the rise and growth of documentary forms, including audio, film, television, photography, literary journalism and ethnography. Students will study representative works from each documentary approach and learn to analyze the techniques of observation and representation at use in these pieces. Students will become familiar with major theoretical constructions of documentary and be able to use these analytical tools to critique documentary forms. Lab for film viewing required.

This course examines the history and heritage of Italian cinema through an analysis of critically acclaimed films produced in Rome. Topics of focus include the comparison of Italian and Hollywood constructions of historical settings, and the cinematic organization of visual space. The course features visits to the Roman sites where films examined in the course were produced. The course's goal is the development of an understanding of filmmakers' artistic choices and the expectations that they set up for their audiences through setting. Offered in conjunction with the Rome Film Studies Program.

This course provides an exploration of contemporary Italian culture through the medium of cinema. The course examines how cinema addresses complex social and political concerns in Italy. Topics and themes include health care; the transformation of the structure of the family; immigration and emigration; the perennial problem of organized crime; and the difficulties faced by the younger generations in their attempt to integrate into society. Italian film industry professionals and cultural historians will provide context and perspective on contemporary social issues facing Italy. Offered in conjunction with the Rome Film Studies Program.
MCS 271
MEDIA AND CULTURAL STUDIES
Undergraduate
This course provides students with a theoretical and methodological background in the interdisciplinary field of cultural studies, which considers media and culture as sites for the construction and contestation of race, class, gender, ethnicity, sexuality and nation. The course provides a foundation in critical cultural studies, ideology critique, critical race and gender studies, transnational media studies and active audience studies. Formerly Introduction to Radio, Television and Film.

MCS 273
STORYTELLING & STYLE IN CINEMA
Undergraduate
Course covers basic concepts and terminology of film and video as forms of art and mass culture. This course covers the aesthetic elements that constitute film and video texts: plot structures, sets, costumes and makeup, acting, lighting, cinematography, editing, and sound. By performing extensive textual analyses, students learn how the interaction of these elements produces meaning. Students also gain basics of how these concepts are practiced in film production. After mastering the aesthetic concepts, students also examine their use in three different modes of film: fiction, documentary, and the avant-garde. There is a required lab for film viewing. (Formerly Film/Video Analysis)

MCS 286
RADIO PRACTICUM
Undergraduate
Students who already actively participate at DePaul's radio station have the opportunity, depending on the station's needs, to produce on-air announcements, specialized broadcasts (weather, sports, University-based topics), newscasts, and assist station managers with their day-to-day responsibilities for MCS credit. In addition to working at the radio station, students must successfully complete a short research project on an approved topic.

MCS 290
MEDIA & CINEMA STUDIES WORKSHOP (VARIABLE TOPICS)
Undergraduate
This course allows students to sample a range of hands on, practical offerings in media and cinema studies that can enhance their knowledge and expertise. Two types of workshop classes are offered: research and production. Examples of Research Workshop topics can include film criticism, Survey Design, and Academic Writing Bootcamp. Examples of Production Workshop topics include non-linear editing with Final Cut Pro, Multimedia Design, and Video Camera Basics. Students may take a maximum of 4 credit hours of MCS 290 in the major, and a total of 8 credit hours.

MCS 331
TOPICS IN DOCUMENTARY STUDIES
Undergraduate
A rotating topics course that could focus on specific historical era or specific group of texts or documentarians from across film, television, audio, writing, and photography. Courses like Feminism & Documentary, and Political Documentary fit under this heading.

MCS 339
RADIO BROADCASTING
Undergraduate
The overall objectives of this course are to familiarize students with the history and practices of commercial and college radio broadcasting and to afford students hands-on broadcasting opportunities at our state-of-the-art radio station. Numerous topics and challenges facing modern radio stations will be discussed, including deregulation, copyright law, and decency standards. It is expected that upon successful completion of this course that students will be prepared for advanced broadcasting and production courses and radio and television internships.

MCS 341
TOPICS IN RADIO STUDIES
Undergraduate
Subjects rotate among several historical and conceptual topics, such as Rock Radio, Talk Radio, Gender and Radio, Radio and American Culture, etc. Students will have the opportunity to build upon the foundations of radio that are explored in other radio courses. Radio topics courses are considered advanced study in the subject area; therefore, students are encouraged to complete MCS 339 or MCS 342 prior to taking a radio topics course.
MCS 342
HISTORY OF TELEVISION & RADIO
Undergraduate
A history of radio, television, and cable that engages with elements such as programming, economics, industrial structures, audiences, government and industry policies, and social effects. The course includes viewing, analysis, and criticism of a wide variety of American programming.

MCS 343
MEDIA ETHICS
Undergraduate
Entertainment and social media dominate popular culture today in a way that begins to completely define American culture. In what ways do entertainment media impact society? As creators of media, what special responsibilities do we have? And as creators of entertainment media, how can we use these ethical theories in our daily practice? This course will examine the underlying ethical theories used when we try to arrive at ethical judgments about right and wrong. This course will concentrate on analyzing the impact of digital entertainment on an individual and society. The issue of balancing individual creativity vs. cultural impact, particularly on children, will be addressed. The course will culminate with the formulation of elements of an ethical code of conduct for every electronic (social) media, television professional and movie creator.

THE SEXUAL REVOLUTION: HOLLYWOOD IN THE 1960s
Undergraduate
The late 1960s are often described as a time of "Sexual Revolution" in America, with loosening standards and attitudes about sex and sexual practices. But was this period as "liberated" as it has appeared to be? Who was liberated by these new attitudes, and from what? How do attitudes about sexuality in the 1960s compare to our attitudes now? This course uses the study of American cultural history to examine perspectives of sexuality in the 1960s, and it focuses upon the films that Hollywood produced to represent this "new" sexuality. In the process, the course examines shifting definitions of gender and sexuality with which American culture was contending during this revolutionary time.

TOPICS IN FILM GENRE
Undergraduate
This course offers an historical examination of film genres, with a varying focus on one particular genre: film noir, musicals, melodrama, detective/gangster film, science fiction film, comedy, Western, animation, youth films. The course explores the relationship of genres to general social histories. Lab for film viewing required.

MCS 349
TOPICS IN FILM STUDIES
Undergraduate
Examination of a particular era of film history or national cinema, film movements, or moments in social history and their relationship to film production. Topics currently in rotation include Film Sound Studies, American Films of the 1970s, War and Film, feminist film, Psychoanalysis and Cinema, etc. Lab for film viewing required.

MCS 350
TOPICS IN GLOBAL CINEMA
Undergraduate
This course is designed as a critical study of global filmmakers and the issues surrounding cinema and its transnational circulation. The class will examine specific aspects of the growth and evolution of cinema and look at points of contact between different cultural discourses, national cinematic styles, genres, and reception. Artistic, social, political, and industrial issues will be examined to provide different models of cinematic creation and consumption. Recent topics have included Latin American Cinemas, Asian Cinemas, Transnational Cinema, New German Cinema, History of French Film, Contemporary Global Directors, etc. Lab for film viewing required.

MCS 351
TOPICS IN TELEVISION STUDIES
Undergraduate
This course offers advanced study of television as a unique audio-visual culture with its own history and styles. This course presumes basic knowledge of television terms and methods of media analysis. Studies of a selected aspect of television history, television criticism, or national television are offered regularly. Recent topics have included Global Television, Reality TV, American TV of the 1950s, Television News, etc.
TOPICS IN NEW MEDIA
Undergraduate
This course examines the effects of new and/or digital media on interpersonal communication, media industries, and/or media culture. Depending on the specific focus of this variable elective course, it might focus on economic, social, political, or aesthetic implications of new media, including the Internet, interactive games, and other new media technologies and applications.

MCS 353
TOPICS IN MEDIA STUDIES
Undergraduate
This is a rotating topics class for subjects that encompass a number of different media, including radio, television, film. Possible topics may include: Media and Politics, Contemporary News Media, Reception Studies, Popular Culture Studies, etc.

MCS 354
TOPICS IN MASS MEDIA
Undergraduate
This is a rotating topics class for subjects that span a broad range of media outlets, from radio, television, film, and new media to journalism, advertising, and public relations. Possible topics may include: Chinese Mass Media, Children's Media, Media and Censorship, Media Regulation, etc.

MCS 355
US TELEVISION AND SEXUALITY
Undergraduate
This course will examine the continued negotiation of sex and sexuality on American television. Whether through their structuring absence, head-on attendance, or mere subtle implication, sex and sexuality have been omnipresent within the medium since its proliferation in the late 1940s. Through lenses of TV, social history, and gender/sexuality criticism, this course will examine various ways in which sexual issues such as the marriage bed, female sexual agency, GLBT visibility, teen sex, and rape have made their ways onto and been pushed off of the small screen. It will also interrogate how these broad categories interact with TV's assumed social role, contemporary and historical notions of American values, and TV regulation.

TOPICS IN DOCUMENTARY PRODUCTION
Undergraduate
The course will focus on developing skills in conceptualizing, directing, and editing various styles of documentary films. Students will explore the documentary filmmaking process by viewing a range of documentary films and deconstructing/discussing their attributes, learning basic interview techniques and constructing narratives and stories. Emphasis will be placed on developing technical proficiencies in hand-held cinematography, location sound recording, and editing. Students will produce documentary projects in team groups throughout the term. Ultimately, the goal is for students to learn to define and interpret their own personal directorial approach to documentary filmmaking.

TOPICS IN TELEVISION PRODUCTION
Undergraduate
This is a rotating topics class for developing skills in the conceptualization, direction, and editing of television programs. Students will explore techniques of television storytelling and style. Students will produce projects throughout the term.

MCS 358
TOPICS IN COMICS STUDIES
Undergraduate
This is a rotating topics class for subjects pertaining to the study of the comics in media including comic books, graphic novels, webcomics, and other forms of sequential art and graphic narrative.
MCS 360
B-MOVIES
Undergraduate
This course will explore the role of the B-movie in film history: from its origins in the 1930s, through its evolution in the 1950s and all the way up to the modern critical application of the 'B' label to a variety of different film genres, styles and budgets. Students will examine the place of the B's within the overall contexts of both mainstream Hollywood cinema and low-budget filmmaking in general. Specific focus will be placed on issues of economic mode of production and how this impacts a film's aesthetics, as well as theories of cultural distinction regarding the notion of 'film trash' such as camp theory and cultism. A variety of films will be screened in class. Please take into consideration when choosing this course that we will screen films that may at times contain highly lurid, violent and/or sexual imagery.

MCS 361
FANDOM & PARTICIPATORY CULTURE
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to the world of media fandom. Fans are people who hold an emotional attachment to media texts. By investigating the types of media texts people connect to, as well as the work fans do in their community, students encounter new ways of participating with media. Students not only examine fans as cultural "producers," who make media just as much as they consume it, but also examine media from the point of view of a fan. This course also looks at how participating in fandom can aid the development of diversity and positive social change.

MCS 366
COMMUNICATION, TECHNOLOGY AND SOCIETY
Undergraduate
Survey of a variety of contemporary and historical issues related to the introduction and diffusion of communication technologies in society. Especially examines how new technologies, particularly the Internet, are transforming the communication landscape. Emphasis on issues of intellectual property, surveillance, privacy, regulation, message construction, and access will be central to this course.

MCS 373
AUDIO DOCUMENTARY
Undergraduate
This course uses hands-on projects so that students can explore the steps in the process of creating an audio documentary. Through practical application students consider questions that surround the interpretation of cultural experience. Additionally, students analyze a variety of approaches to audio documentary in an effort to understand better this significant form of storytelling.

MCS 375
LATINO/A TELEVISION AND MEDIA
Undergraduate
Drawing from Latin American and U.S. television studies, this course explores the political, industrial and cultural dynamics that shape televisual representations in Latin American television and/or Spanish language Television in the US. More specifically, Spanish-language television and media will be examined from interdisciplinary frameworks, which include the cultural analysis of televisual modes, national and international regulations of media production and distribution, histories of production, and ethnographies of viewing.

MCS 376
LATIN AMERICAN CINEMA
Undergraduate
This course examines the production, distribution and impact of cinema in the Latin American context. Transnational relations with other industries, such as Hollywood and the European film context will be considered. We will investigate how social, economic and political forces have shaped or are presently influencing and transforming national cinemas. Questions of identity and cultural difference, particularly in relation to immigration, diasporas, transnationalism, youth culture, class, gender, sexuality, race and ethnicity are central to the discussions. We will consider the diversity of styles and topics that are now redefining the cinema of the region.

MCS 383
TALKING ABOUT FILM: THEORY & CRITICISM
Undergraduate
This course is to familiarize students with a wide range of disciplines (film, art history, philosophy, psychology, etc.) and how these ideas both inflected the development of classical film theories as well as the evolution of cinema. Moreover, the scope of the course seeks to examine the overall process whereby theoretical discourse develops historically. Lab for film viewing required.

MCS 273 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.
MCS 384
FILMMAKERS, FILM MOVEMENTS: PUTTING THEORY INTO ACTION
Undergraduate
This course will explore different movements and theories related to cinema through their conceptualization and/or execution by the filmmakers themselves. By examining such relationships, the course will highlight the inherent interconnectedness of film criticism and film production. Examples may include such movements as Mumblecore, Dogme 95, French New Wave, Feminist Film, and New Queer Cinema.

MCS 386
RADIO PRODUCTION
Undergraduate
Students will learn radio broadcasting and audio production techniques. Students will work in a lab environment to complete broadcast quality production work. Though the emphasis of the course will be on broadcast writing, speech, and production techniques, students will have the opportunity to perform on-air shifts at DePaul's radio station and complete non-traditional production work, such as podcasts.

MCS 389
TOPICS IN MEDIA PRODUCTION
Undergraduate
This course is a rotating topic course in areas of media production and may include classes such as Podcasting, Advanced Radio Production, Advanced Audio Documentary, Radio News, Multimedia Production, etc.

MCS 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
MCS 501
FILM AND MEDIA THEORY
Graduate
This course will serve as a foundation for students in theories of film, television, and new media. An engagement with areas such as formal analysis, television and film spectatorship, authorship, television flow, and media specificity will provide both a brief historical framework for these disciplines, as well as a survey of major texts. Readings will include scholars/theorists such as Sergei Eisenstein, David Bordwell, Laura Mulvey, Horace Newcomb, Raymond Williams, Nick Browne, and Henry Jenkins. Formerly MCS 501 Introduction to Media Studies.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 502
MEDIA AND CULTURAL STUDIES
Graduate
This course provides students with a theoretical and methodological background in the interdisciplinary field of cultural studies, which considers media and culture as sites for the construction and contestant of race, class, gender, ethnicity, sexuality and nation. The course provides a foundation in critical cultural studies, ideology critique, critical race and gender studies, transnational media studies and active audience studies.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 503
GLOBAL CINEMA/ MEDIA
Graduate
This course surveys a number of frameworks for understanding the global dynamics that constitute particular media cultures around the world. We will examine historical perspectives and debates concerning the processes of globalization and the media's constitutive role in impacting our conceptions of space and time across local, national and transnational terrains. Students will interrogate how the actions of nation states, civil society and transnational corporations impact media industries and ask how media representations are contested across registers of nation, region, citizenship, class, religion, labor, gender, Diaspora, race, migration and ethnicity.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.
MCS 504
HISTORIOGRAPHY AND RESEARCH
Graduate
This course will offer critical perspectives and methods to film and media history and research. Areas of exploration will include how popular history and academic historiography interact, the way certain subjects and facts are emphasized over others, the different forms used to represent historical knowledge, and questions of history and memory. In addition to the assumptions, methods, and purposes of film/media histories, the course will also ask crucial questions regarding the nature of inquiry and the status of data and evidence. Students will learn how to address a specific research question through a variety of methodologies in a cogent and comprehensive manner. Students will also develop competency in writing a research proposal and using research tools such as Endnote and online journal databases.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 519
TOPICS FOR CAREER DEVELOPMENT IN MEDIA
Graduate
This course introduces students to possible areas for professional advancement in media and cinema. As a rotating topic, it will focus on four areas of development: archiving and curating; community activism; programming series and festivals; the practice of media criticism; and the use of digital media in various contexts. The courses under this rubric may include experiential learning opportunities.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 520
TOPICS IN MEDIA STUDIES
Graduate
This is a seminar that focuses on a particular area of media studies including, but not limited to, topics such as the contemporary media industries, kids media culture, television studies, music cultures, digital divide, race and media, celebrity culture, radio studies, war and media, gender and media, global television, new media studies and sexuality and media. Students may take this seminar repeatedly in different topic areas.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 521
TOPICS IN CINEMA STUDIES
Graduate
This is a seminar-level course that provides in-depth examinations of Cinema Studies topics. Topics vary from quarter to quarter and may include studies of film genres, film authorship, national cinemas, global cinema, gender in cinema, animation, film theory, early cinema, film aesthetics, race and representation, film sound studies, or other rotating topics.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 522
TOPICS IN CINEMA/MEDIA HISTORY
Graduate
Examination of a particular era of film history or national cinema, film movements, or moments in social history and their relationship to film production. Topics currently in rotation include American Films of the 1970s, Latin American Cinema, War and Film, New German Cinema, feminist film, etc. Examination of a particular eras or forms of television/media from a historical perspective. Topics could include but are not limited to: History of American Broadcasting, International Broadcasting Structures, Television Outside the Box, Public and Community Broadcasting, genre-specific histories, etc.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 523
TOPICS IN GLOBAL FILM & MEDIA
Graduate
This course surveys a number of frameworks for understanding the global dynamics that constitute particular media cultures around the world. We will examine historical perspectives and debates concerning the processes of globalization and the media's constitutive role in impacting our conceptions of space and time across local, national and transnational terrains. Students will interrogate how the actions of nation states, civil society and transnational corporations impact media industries and ask how media representations are contested across registers of nation, region, citizenship, class, religion, labor, gender, Diaspora, race, migration and ethnicity.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.
MCS 530
NEW MEDIA AND CULTURE
Graduate
This seminar considers the cultural ramifications of new media in shaping life experience and opportunity. As interactive digital media technologies expand opportunities for social networking, text and instant messaging, file sharing, collaborative authoring, blogging, podcasting and mobile communication, this seminar asks how these new technologies impact identity formation, creative participation and concepts of public culture. Issues of concern include race, gender, class, sexuality, cultural citizenship, fandom, subcultures and democratic participation.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 531
MEDIA POLICY
Graduate
This seminar considers the regulatory policies that have shaped media culture including those governing ownership, content, labor and intellectual property. The focus is on how citizens, industries, governments and social movements have sought to impact the role of media in public and private life including issues such as civil rights, media conglomerations, sex and violence, free speech, public access, children's media, public radio/TV, fair use in copyright, international governance, commercialization and equal opportunity. Students engage with these issues through investigating historical and contemporary case studies within local and global contexts.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 532
ASIAN CINEMA/ MEDIA
Graduate
This seminar examines the cultural, social and economic contexts to Asian cinema/media. The course focuses on national and regional cinema/media industries and their transnational contexts of production, circulation and reception. Students consider questions of identity and cultural difference, particularly in relation to immigration, Diasporas, transnationalism, youth culture, class, gender, sexuality, race and ethnicity. As well as an historical survey, the course considers recent developments as digital technologies impact Asian media cultures.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 533
LATIN AMERICAN CINEMA/ MEDIA
Graduate
This seminar examines the production, distribution and impact of cinema and media in the Latin American context. We will view a range of works from major and minor industries and investigate how social, economic and political forces have shaped or are presently influencing and transforming national cinemas and their industries. Questions of identity and cultural difference, particularly in relation to immigration, diasporas, transnationalism, youth culture, class, gender, sexuality, race and ethnicity are central to the discussions. We will consider the diversity of styles and topics as much as the discursive and theoretical frameworks that in the past defined, or those that are now redefining, the cinema and media of the region.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 534
DOCUMENTARY STUDIES
Graduate
This course examines the rise and growth of documentary forms, including audio, film, television, photography, and literary journalism. Students will study representative works from each documentary approach and learn to analyze the techniques of observation and representation at use in these pieces. Students will become familiar with the social, aesthetic, and historical discourses of documentary and understand major theoretical and critical approaches of analyzing documentary forms. Students will become aware of the convergent and divergent qualities that are features of qualitative research, journalism, and documentary practice. Students will learn how documentary functions as a witness to personal and public histories.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.
MCS 541
AUDI DOCUMENTARY
Graduate
This course uses hands-on projects so that students can explore the steps in the process of creating an audio documentary. Through practical application students consider questions that surround the interpretation of cultural experience. Additionally, students analyze a variety of approaches to audio documentary in an effort to understand better this significant form of storytelling.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 542
TOPICS IN PRODUCTION
Graduate
This is a seminar that focuses on a particular area of media production including, but not limited to, topics such as comedy writing, documentary production, and screenwriting. Students may take this seminar repeatedly in different topic areas. PREREQUISITE(S): Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or professor approval is a prerequisite for this class.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 550
FANDOM AND ACTIVE AUDIENCES
Graduate
Fans, people who hold an emotional attachment to a particular object, have been the object of academic study for twenty years; yet, the study of audiences and reader/viewer-ship has a much longer and more detailed history that goes back hundreds of years. Why this fascination with the way people interpret and react to media? What is it about fans, audiences, or readers that holds such interest for academics? This course will explore the relationship between fans, academics, and cultural studies. Through an examination of the way fans and active audiences are studied, we can better understand our media, our texts, and our selves.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 575
DIGITAL MEDIA ETHICS
Graduate
This course provides students with the necessary background to investigate legal and ethical issues in digital technology and culture. Additionally, students practice digital literacy as an application of these ethical issues. This class offers topics including, but not limited to copyright, authorship, attribution, civics, vernacular creativity, Free Speech, filesharing, piracy, libel, access, participation, modes of control, net neutrality, etc., in order for students will come away with a sense of the ethical issues within today’s culture.

Status as a MA-DCMA or a MA-MCS student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 590
MEDIA & CINEMA STUDIES WORKSHOP (VARIABLE TOPICS)
Graduate
This course allows students to sample a range of hands on, practical offerings in communication that can enhance their knowledge and expertise. Topics offered include survey design and focus groups.

Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 592
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
This is a 4-credit hour course reserved for independent coursework and specialization under the supervision of a faculty member. Students can propose to take this class after completing six 4-hour courses in the MCS program. Enrollment in this course requires the proposal of a student-designed syllabus that is approved by both the supervising professor and College of Communication administration. See website for Independent Study proposal form. PREREQUISITE(S): Status as a Graduate Media and Cinema Studies student is a prerequisite for this class. ETHICS AND LEADERSHIP: STREETS OF CHICAGO
Graduate
The innovative Management Department Streets of Chicago course, "Leadership & Ethics," consists of ten on-site meetings with current senior leaders in the Chicago community (followed by in-class discussion sessions). These meetings allow students the exciting and rare opportunity to engage in personalized, in-depth conversations with leaders in government, CEOs and senior executives from for-profit corporations, and directors of nonprofit organizations. The meetings take place at the leader's place of business and will allow for an informal discussion with individuals otherwise known to students only through the media and at a distance. The purpose of these conversations is to gain knowledge about the role of leaders in today's corporate and non-profit environments, the impact of ethics in leadership decision-making and the responsibilities and burdens carried by these individuals. Students learn first-hand from the experiences of these extraordinary success stories so that they can glean the critical elements necessary for successful and ethical leadership. In-class sessions subsequent to each leadership meeting will involve briefings on key issues facing the leaders involved, analysis of risk assessment and management, and critical review of leadership decision-making in order to most effectively explore the actual process of leadership and the development of leadership capability and qualities. As such, the course is designed to serve both those students who are interested in leading their own entrepreneurial ventures, as well as those who seek leadership roles in larger corporations or other organizations.

This course focuses on the contribution of marketing to the establishment of company policies, objectives, and marketing planning.

MKT 536
PRICING STRATEGY
Graduate
Managing pricing effectively affects a company's growth and profitability more directly and quickly than any other strategic decision. This course explores methods of analyzing pricing decisions, influencing customers' price perceptions, managing sales promotions and negotiations, and forecasting industry price trends. Pricing decisions for both new product introductions and mature product profit management are addressed. Students will discover best practices in pricing decision making at the industry, market, and transactional level.

MKT 537
NEW PRODUCT MANAGEMENT
Graduate
The course has four objectives: first, to familiarize participants with how firms manage the conceptualization, development and launch of new products and services; second, to develop a systematic process for new product development that matches the existing business context; third, to give participants knowledge of some useful and immediately applicable tools that will enable them to participate and lead a team that effectively translates a firm's strategy and customer needs into successful products and services; and finally, help participants understand the impact of company dynamics in affecting the new product development process.

MKT 540
STRATEGIC PLANNING: DEVELOPING SUSTAINABLE BUSINESS MODELS
Graduate
In today's hyper-competitive business environment, firms find it increasingly difficult to generate sustainable revenue growth. This course uses an organic-growth, marketing-based, customer-driven approach for developing sustainable year-on-year revenue growth. Linkages are created between existing benefits-based customer segmentation strategies, changing customer needs, the choice of a firm's or a business unit's product/service-line positioning strategy, its chosen business model, and finally its performance. Topics covered include:- Outcomes-based segmentation- Price-performance curves- Market-leader positioning approaches- Business model visualization and representation- Dynamic positioning, product-line and business unit adaptation- Value migration and threats to sustainabilityBy the end of the course, students will know how to detect signals of change in customer needs and adapt their business models resulting in sustainability. The course consists of lecture-discussions of behavioral theories, the empirical findings of contemporary research, and case studies designed to illustrate the salient issues involved in developing consumer-oriented marketing strategies.

MKT 555 is a prerequisite for this class.

The marketing of business goods and services to other businesses (B:B) is more significant in our economy than consumer marketing and is the key to the continued success and productivity of the U.S. economy. In this course, the principles and practices of inter-industry marketing will be explored by case analysis. The factors which must be considered before establishing marketing programs manufacturers, service industries and exporters will be examined. Examples will be drawn from varied industries, including equipment, electronics, computer systems, health care and others. New product introduction, distribution, and other marketing strategies will be emphasized.

MKT 555 is a prerequisite for this class.

Students are provided with an overview of the marketing process for consumer-oriented firms. Focus is placed on decision-making that aligns a firm's market offerings with the wants and needs of targeted segments of customers within a continuously changing environment. Written cases/projects are part of the course assignment.

The differences between markets and distribution systems in various countries are explored. By emphasizing the social and economic factors causing these differences a sound understanding of and empathy with different international marketing problems are developed. Analyses are made of the organization of trade channels in various cultures, of typical government policies towards international trade in countries at different stages of development, and of international marketing research, advertising, and exporting. Offered Variably.

MKT 555 is a prerequisite for this class.
MKT 558
MARKETING ACROSS CULTURES: A GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE
Graduate
The course is structured to examine culture from two dimensions: a cross-cultural view, which compares local culture customs across various national marketing environments; and an intercultural approach where the focus is to exam the interaction between foreign firms and a host-country culture. Learning objectives:- Students will gain an understanding of cultural variables from a global perspective.- Students will gain the ability to compare and analyze national cultural similarities and differences across national, regional and global environments.- Students will gain the ability to recognize and analyze the interaction in marketing approaches between people and business groups who have different national/cultural backgrounds.

MKT 559
EMERGING MARKETS
Graduate
Emerging markets are quite different from the developed economies of the world. Today, firms from the West look for new market opportunities outside of the advanced economies of the world. They realize that their traditional markets are oversaturated, overly competitive and rapidly aging. They recognize that future opportunities for long-term sustainable growth will be found in emerging markets.

MKT 555 is a prerequisite for this class.

MKT 575
ADVERTISING AND SALES PROMOTION MANAGEMENT
Graduate
A study of the theories and techniques applicable to the development of the promotional mix. Class consists of analysis and development of objectives, budgets, message design and media selection, and measuring the effectiveness of these for mass design and direct promotional vehicles.

MKT 545 and MKT 555 are prerequisites for this class.

MKT 576
EFFECTIVE BUSINESS COMMUNICATION
Graduate
This course is designed to expand the participant's communication skills through application of the principles of communication science and the psychology of persuasion in a contemporary business setting. Personal ethics and credibility are explored as important components of effective communication, both as individual's and as team members. Students are shown how to develop successful communication and message packaging strategies useful in a variety of communication venues including memos, meetings, briefings, interviews and individual and team presentations. Oral presentations and written communication techniques are explored including use of visuals, computer graphics, and layout techniques. The mechanisms of Speech Apprehension (stage fright) are presented as well as techniques for management and reduction of this common, debilitating phenomenon. Personal ethics and credibility are explored as important components of effective communication.

MKT 577
LEADING BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This is a course designed for managers or future team leaders seeking to maximize their resources to achieve sound business results for their organizations and customers. Utilizing current practices, processes, and proven in-market techniques, students will learn to create and maintain a customer team that achieves results with the internal as well as external customer. Emphasis will be placed on: Team Leadership Skills, Profiling and Segmenting Customers, Managing Team Performance, Developing Business Plans and Relationships, internally and externally.

MKT 578
SALES STRATEGY & TECHNOLOGY
Graduate
Students taking this course will be provided with a comprehensive understanding of sales strategy and an appreciation of sales technology used today to optimally organize and deploy sales resources. At the heart of this course is an introduction to the principles of customer relationship marketing and customer acquisition programming. Students will learn via lecture, text, guest lectures, exposure to the latest technological tools and current case study. This course will benefit participants by providing a true perspective as to what role sales plays today and will play in the future of customer-centric organizations.

MKT 555 is a prerequisite for this class.
MKT 582
CATEGORY MANAGEMENT
Graduate
Category management is the practice of managing a group of products as one entity, or category to maximize the return for a particular retailer, as it relates to shelf inventory, shelf position, consumer shopping patterns and promotion. The course provides the analytical framework necessary to conduct a category review and make strategic recommendations to both manufacturers and retailers. The Department of Marketing partners with a number of major consumer packaged goods (CPG) manufacturers and retailers who provide data for analysis. In addition to working on real data, students learn how to use advanced software such as Nielsen's Category Business Planner, Homescan, InfiNet and Spaceman.

MONETIZING MARKETING STRATEGY
Graduate
The goal of every business strategy is to create profitable customers by delivering superior value. The way in which that strategy is monetized in the implementation process is critical to the success of the venture. The key focus of the course will be the development of useful processes and metrics through the marketing and selling activities to deliver customer and corporate value which will allow managers to monitor and measure individual corporate performance. Student learning will be assessed by a combination of class participation, weekly assignments, examinations, and team performance on final written proposals and presentations.

MKT 590
MARKETING OF SERVICES
Graduate
This course examines service organizations' distinctive approach to marketing strategy development and execution. Differences and similarities between the marketing of services and that of manufactured goods will be discussed. Other topics include measurement of quality and customer satisfaction, customer behavior and expectations, roles of service providers and customers, service competitive advantages, relationship management, overlap of service marketing with other organizational disciplines (e.g. H.R., operations, finance), organization design and value-chain impacts, outsourcing challenges and opportunities, global issues, macro environmental impacts, Business to Business and Business to Consumer examples and strategies in multiple vertical markets (e.g. financial services, technology, retail catalog, manufacturing, health care, hospitality and entertainment, automotive, government). Student groups will maintain service encounter journals which will be used as input to the group's analysis paper assignment. Two abbreviated exams will measure the student's grasp of service marketing concepts. Group case analysis work will reinforce the course concepts.

MKT 595
INTERNET AND INTERACTIVE MARKETING
Graduate
Explores the emerging business models, rules, tactics, and strategies associated with this medium. Integration with other channels and marketing operations is stressed. Classes are discussion-based, drawing on current applied readings and cases from a variety of industries in both the business-to-business and business-consumer markets.

MKT 793
MARKETING INTERNSHIP
Graduate
Internships provide an opportunity to obtain valuable professional experience and contacts in many areas of marketing e.g. advertising agencies, manufacturing, services, public relations agencies, and communications. The Department's internship coordinator will work with each student to obtain placement, if needed. Student will work for and study the marketing operations of the organization. Marketing internship may be taken, with approval of the coordinator, any quarter.

INDEPENDENT STUDY [NON-CAPSTONE]
Graduate
Independent study in an area that does not lead directly into the thesis or capstone. Students may also register for this course on a topic indirectly related to their thesis or capstone if they will subsequently take MLS 498, in which the student directly prepares to write the Integrating Project/Thesis. The MALS and IDS Program requires that students taking independent studies follow a specified format of meeting frequency, activities, and scholarly production. This format is available on the program web site or from the MALS and IDS office. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the instructor of the independent study.

MLS 498
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Independent study undertaken as preparation for thesis or practicum capstone options. This course is optional preparation for MLS 499, Capstone. The MALS and IDS Program requires that students taking this course follow a specified format of meeting frequency, that they produce a review of literature related to their thesis or practicum, an annotated bibliography, and the required Formal Proposal for the thesis or practicum. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the permission of the instructor who serves as the thesis or practicum director.

MLS 499
CAPSTONE
Graduate
Capstone for students doing a thesis, practicum or enhanced portfolio essay. Students may register for this course after the Formal Proposal for the thesis or practicum, or the Enhanced Portfolio Essay Proposal, has been approved. Students are normally expected to complete their capstone projects within the quarter in which they take this course. This course carries four hours of credit. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the permission of the instructor who serves as the student's capstone director.

MLS 500
CAPSTONE
Graduate
A seminar offered occasionally to guide groups of students working on their capstone projects.

ACTIVE STATUS
Graduate
Students register for this course during periods when they are not registered for courses but wish to have access to university facilities. Ordinarily students will not use this course once they have been admitted to candidacy during the thesis or capstone.

MLS 502
CANDIDACY CONTINUATION
Graduate
Students who have completed MLS 499 Thesis/Capstone may register for this course in order to have continued access to university facilities. Students may register for this course no more than three times. Non-credit.

MMT 401
FOUNDATIONS OF MATHEMATICAL THINKING AND LEARNING IN THE MIDDLE SCHOOL
Graduate
This course is designed to help participants construct meaningful connections between being a learner of mathematics (i.e., a person who can solve problems, reason mathematically, communicate findings and thinking, and make connections) and being a teacher of mathematics (i.e., a person who can help others understand, use, and apply mathematical ideas). The course will begin the process (which will be continued throughout the remainder of the Master of Arts in Middle School mathematics Education program) of having students explore the interplay between narratives describing their own classroom experiences as well as literature and research about others' experiences in order to analyze the impact of developmental and interpersonal experiences on the learning and teaching of mathematics.
Critical to the success of middle school mathematics learners, is their teachers' understanding of the multiple perspectives that research has taught us, as educators, about how people learn. In this course, participants will engage with the history and evolution of how the fields of educational psychology, cognitive science, applied developmental psychology, and mathematics education have contributed to a modern understanding of what constitutes effective practice for middle school mathematics teaching. Major theoretical positions and their seminal architects will be highlighted, examined and discussed. A particular emphasis will be put on each position's impact on curriculum development and classroom pedagogy for middle school mathematics.

This course will examine, in the context of classroom practice, the following themes: 1) How students can learn mathematics with conceptual understanding; 2) How to teach mathematics so that students learn with understanding; 3) How to assess students' mathematical knowledge to inform instruction and determine their growth; 4) The nature and content of innovative curriculum projects designed to teach mathematics for conceptual understanding.

This course will span the three quarters of the second academic year of the program and will be partnered with the three content-focused courses offered during the second year. Participants will be introduced to the field of educational inquiry through a study of various designs and methods of doing educational research. In addition, this course will help participants consider current issues in mathematics education in relationship to their own teaching and learning of mathematics and what it means to transfer the mathematics learned in other courses into one's practice as a math teacher. They will identify concrete changes they want to implement in their teaching during the years following their completion of the program based on the new content and ideas to which they have been exposed. As part of the course, the teachers will design an action research project during the first quarter, implement the project during the second quarter, and analyze the data during the third quarter.

See schedule for current offerings.
MOL 210
CLASSICAL MYTHOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course is an interdisciplinary blend of the classical traditions of myth, literature and philosophy, concentrating on myth. It endeavors to place Classical literature into its historical, social and cultural contexts. Students will learn significant myths and the names and functions of the most important characters in them. They will investigate how the ancients used traditional narratives and images to explore, explain and experiment with ideas about themselves and their surroundings in those contexts. Learning about how myth is variously interpreted (as for example by means of theories of myth-interpretation) as well as basic methods of literary criticism (e.g., analysis of language, content, structure, etc.), students will employ ways to identify, understand and interpret the different types of communication present in myth-literature. As they move chronologically through the ancient world students will observe how myths change to reflect differing individual and collective concerns, as well as the specific interests (and so the significant aspects of discourse) of authors and audiences as conditions change. Students will also learn about literary genres, including poetry, tragedy and prose, their properties and distinctions and discover how genres also reflect audiences and times. Students will read and evaluate modern views of myth in order to understand how myth is open to multiple interpretations and upon what sounder bases myth is to be interpreted. While analyzing myths' diversity in various forms of literature, students will come to comprehend what mythology meant to the ancients, as well as those facets and ingredients of myth that are universal, enduring, and meaningful today.

MOL 211
HEROES AND EPICS
Undergraduate
This course centers upon the Homeric Iliad and Odyssey and Vergil's Aeneid and endeavors to place these epic poems into their historical, social, and cultural contexts. Students will learn the definition of epic as a literary genre and discover how this genre evolved to reflect audiences and times. They will learn the components of epic language, in particular, literary devices and structural features (e.g., formulas, nested stories, epic similes). They will be able to describe the plots of the three epics and know the main- and mid-level human characters, gods, and goddesses. They will be able to define and better understand the meanings of "hero" and "heroism." Students will be able to express mature appreciation for the epics as whole works. Learning how the epics are variously interpreted as well as basic methods of literary criticism (e.g., analysis of language, content, structure, etc.), students will employ these as ways to understand and interpret the poems. As they read, learn and evaluate modern views of the epics, students will also acquire better means to distinguish critically between views and interpretations. A strong emphasis in this class will be upon the vital connections between past and present, and how students can become more aware of and understand important lasting concepts such as heroism, leadership, self-definition, etc. Finally, students will relate these stories to modern story-telling in order to understand how the heroes of the ancient Greeks live with us today. In short, they will interpret what epic poetry offered ancient listeners and what it has to teach modern readers. The classical tradition is rich with meaning and significance, even to modern 21st century adults and this class will not only be an exploration of the culture and instruction of the ancient world through epic, but an investigation of what classic motifs remain with us today.

MOL 212
ANCIENT GREEK AND ROMAN TRAGEDY
Undergraduate
Classical Tragedy introduces students to the authors, social contexts and performances of ancient Greek drama. Students will learn how to interpret the "myths" presented on the ancient Greek stage and how to apply what they have learned to detect and interpret the moral, social and political issues raised in them. They will learn the names, works and careers of the principal tragedians: Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides. Students will learn to assess the formal and aesthetic properties of the works of different tragedians. Emphasis will be given to specifics of performance and to seeing a play in the "theater of the mind" as well as gaining command of relevant terminology, e.g., parodos, peripeteia, mimesis, catharsis, etc. Students will learn to outline the plot, argument and key themes of each work clearly and will gain an understanding of the historical context and social conditions motivating each work. The main themes of Greek tragedy (e.g., power, gender, justice, violence etc.) invite comparison to themes of contemporary theater and film. Students will acquire an awareness of ancient Greek tragedy in its connection with our own theatrical and literary culture, and they will reflect upon the influence of Greek drama on modern stage and literature. They will be able to employ several concepts in the analysis of Classical Tragedy.

MOL 213
ANCIENT GREEK AND ROMAN COMEDY
Undergraduate
In this course students encounter selected landmarks of Greek and Roman satirical literature; they learn important theories of interpretation, theories of humor as well as secondary interpretative opinions about the works assigned. They will be engaged in the course-material primarily through readings, lectures and discussions. Students also view or read whole or selected excerpts of modern visual or written literature that will supplement their primary and secondary readings. The roots of comedy extend deep into antiquity. This course, however, endeavors to train intelligent critics of modern satire. Students study authors ancient and modern in order to sharpen their critical abilities and to gain insight into Athens, Rome as well as the contemporary cultural milieu. Students are challenged to regard satire as a critical force. Students encounter comic dramatists with special interest in how the most serious material--war, death, injustice, suffering--is criticized in a way that they can enjoy. With the help of comic theorists students will explore the boundaries of the comic, the social and political function of comedy in different cultural contexts, and the varieties of humor: mad, cathartic, aggressive, destructive, defensive, celebratory etc. Students will confront a host of related issues such as the nature of tragic pleasure, the language and metaphors of humor, and the legal limits of satirical discourse.
MOL 214
THE CLASSICAL FEMININE
Undergraduate
This course attempts to recover the experiences of women in ancient Greece and Rome by examining literary texts and archaeological remains that concern them. Students will investigate women's roles in public and private life and gauge the changes in their situation and representation over time. Given that Greece and Rome are commonly credited as the foundations of Western society, students will frequently discuss the similarities and differences between ancient and contemporary attitudes toward sex and gender. The task is challenged by the paucity of sources that were produced by the women of antiquity themselves; often our view is said to be "filtered through a male lens."

MOL 215
ANCIENT SCIENCE AND ITS LANGUAGE
Undergraduate
Students will study ancient science, its proponents and its epochs, later concentrating on the language of science. Students will learn successive highlights of inquiry within scientific culture, beginning in prehistory and ancient Egypt. As they proceed from Egypt through the ancient Greek enlightenment and onto Roman science and its decline, students will learn the basics of how representative thinkers evaluated and altered "contemporary" understanding. Students will witness firsthand the ever-changing perspective of scientific knowledge and compare it with modern empirical methodology. They will acquire an ability to interpret varying viewpoints of "science" through an overview of changes of perception combined with selected readings from the works of ancient philosophers, physicists and physicians. Students will also learn the composition of scientific terminology; they will learn how to analyze, dissect and compose scientific terms based upon the Classical languages of ancient Greece and Rome.

ARAB CULTURE
Undergraduate
This is the first in a series of three hybrid courses in the Arabic Studies Program that examine Arab culture. The purpose of this course is to provide students with an overview of Arab culture and a clear understanding of its elements and historical events that shaped it. Emphasis will be placed on cultural aspects shared by all Arabs. The course will examine the general concept of culture, and study the elements that form Arab culture. It will also explore the impact of critical factors and events in Arab history from pre-Islamic to modern time on the evolution of Arab culture as we know it today. Students will gain insight into the way Arabs think by examining Arabs’ cultural practices, products, and perspectives. In addition to learning about Arabs and Arab culture, students will practice using technology to research, blog, discuss, and contribute to open-sources on topics related to Arab culture. Students will also have the opportunity to meet and interact with Arabs and the Chicago Arab heritage community.
MOL 341
MEDIA IN THE ARAB WORLD
Undergraduate
This course is one of a series of three culture/media/literature courses strongly recommended for a major in Arabic Studies. It is also an elective course that can be taken by students at large. The purpose of the course is to introduce students to the Arab media--including newspapers, television, and the Internet--as a product of Arab culture. Students will examine Arab media to gain better understanding of its nature, role, content, and influence within emphasis on the context of Arab societies and the factors influencing their people such as politics, religion, technology, and Western influence. In addition to the assigned readings from the textbook and a variety of sources that represent various perspectives, a sample of products of Arab media including newspapers, TV programs, news, cartoons, and blogs will be examined to better understand Arab media. Furthermore, elements and factors that impact Arab media will be analyzed and discussed. The impact of the West on Arab media, and the future of Arab media will also be discussed.

MOL 342
MODERN ARABIC LITERATURE IN TRANSLATION
Undergraduate
This course is one of a series of three courses offered by the Arabic Studies program as part of the major and minor requirement in Arabic Studies. It provides a survey of modern Arabic literature and focuses on various genres, including poetry, plays, short stories, and novels. Works by major Arab writers and poets representing various regions and content related to Arab culture are examined and analyzed to develop an appreciation for Arabic literature and a deeper understanding of Arab culture. This is a hybrid course. Students meet onsite one day a week for 2 hours and conduct work online to satisfy the course requirements. Specific assignments are provided each week through D2L and Ning social network for the online portion of the course.

MOL 349
TEACHING MODERN LANGUAGES
Undergraduate
The Teaching Modern Language course is specially designed for the teacher who is about to begin his/her career teaching foreign languages at the K-12 levels. This course is also designed for accomplished and experienced teachers who wish to receive new information on current theory and practice. The course has as an overall objective to provide learners with the theoretical and practical tools that will enable them to become critical and reflective foreign language practitioners.

MOL 350
METHODS OF TEACHING MODERN LANGUAGES IN THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL
Undergraduate
Provides training in the theory and methods of teaching foreign languages in the elementary school (FLES). Designed for both pre-service and in-service teachers. Pre-service teachers include foreign language majors interested in elementary school teaching and elementary majors who are proficient in a foreign language and interested in teaching FLES. In-service teachers include elementary teachers proficient in a foreign language who are teaching or who are interested in teaching FLES and secondary trained teachers who are teaching or who are interested in teaching FLES. In order to meet the objectives of this course and subsequent methods courses, it is expected that all participants be able to demonstrate proficiency in English and a second language before enrolling.

THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS/ CURRENT RESEARCH SECOND/FOREIGN LANGUAGE ACQUISITION
Undergraduate
This course serves both as undergraduate and graduate-level introduction to the field of second language acquisition (SLA) research. As such, it will introduce students to the research methods, findings, and some of the theoretical discussions that have encompassed the last three decades of SLA research. The focus is on basic questions regarding the process of language learning, rather than on explicitly pedagogical issues. The most important goal of SLA research is to uncover and describe the processes that are potentially affected by instructional efforts. Thus, one of the goals of the course is to have students reflect and, if necessary, modify how they view the role of an instructor and a learner of a second language. The material can be used to inform learning a second language as much as it is instrumental in teaching a second language. The material in this course should encourage students to question assumptions and begin to formulate individual ideas about what goes on in classrooms, how we learn, and how this learning could inform our teaching of second language. A final goal is to introduce you to critical reading of research articles in the field, as a preparation for possible further study of SLA.

MOL 355
CONTEMPORARY CRITICISM
Undergraduate
An overview of contemporary criticism from Russian formalism to post-modernism. Cross-listed as CPL 355.

PROFESSIONAL FOUNDATIONS
Graduate
In this course students will prepare a series of surveys/summaries of research literature and learning resources. They will identify one or more professional organizations such as MLA, CLA, ACTFL, CTFL, AATX, and others. Using their by-laws, publications, and recent conference programs, students will write a literature summary that identifies the major issues of concern to these organizations, and analyze their resources and professional standards related to research and practice in the students' field of interest. Required for Modern Language MA students.

MOL 402
LANGUAGE, SELF AND SOCIETY
Graduate
This course offers students a theoretical and methodological introduction to the theory and methods of the study of language variation and change and its relationship to various social and individual factors (e.g. race, class, sex, ethnicity, identity, etc.). It introduces students to the concepts, theories, and methods used to analyze language and its role in the definition and construction of individual and group identity. We will look specifically at how social and individual factors may influence linguistic structure and vice versa. The course will explore various theories of sociolinguistics, including the interaction between language and speakers' membership in various groups, linguistic variation across groups, intergroup theory, dialectology, and discourse analysis, among others. Through the course readings students will consider and critically analyze the notions of the speech community and the individual, the existence (or not) of dialects, synchronic variation and diachronic change, the relationship between social factors and language, language policy and planning, language standardization, linguistic ethnography, and theories related to education and society. Bilingual phenomena such as code switching, language contact, and the creation of pidgins and creoles will also be examined. Topics may vary by quarter. This course is required for language MA students.
MOL 403
COMMUNITIES OF PRACTICE
Graduate
New Course Description: In this course, students will study Western and non-Western cultural texts that address a central theme (for example: "Citizenship," "Freedom and Oppression," "Globalization," "Popular pedagogy"). Students will practice talking and writing about the ethical questions, inter-cultural conversations, and analytical methods common to the liberal arts tradition as they apply to their use of a language in a particular professional setting. Students explore the varied kinds of local and global communities in the contemporary world and place them in political, economic, and historic contexts to understand how they have transformed over time, with specific attention to the interaction of economic (i.e., work practice) and social ties (i.e., familial, religious, ethnic, linguistic) in forming and transforming local, national, international and global communities. The course will examine how various ethnic groups have used communities as a starting place to assimilate and make their adjustments to nations as well as maintain ties to the culture and heritage of their home country. Topics vary by quarter and some sections will include service learning opportunities. This course is required for language MA students.

MAMOL CAPSTONE
Graduate
As the required capstone course for the M.A. program in Modern Languages, MOL 496 requires students to reflect on their coursework and the materials that they have produced for their portfolios in order to articulate a coherent vision of their experience in the program. It encourages them to learn from each other’s professional interests, builds community among them, and facilitates interactive learning. The course employs a seminar design that is intentionally flexible, and varies depending upon the participating students’ goals and objectives. Class sessions will focus on the common issues and concerns that all students face as “language professionals.” In addition, each student must select a representative work (the portfolio project), create an overview and commentary text on this work, and present the work to the class. Each student's portfolio and project (whether a thesis, internship, or creative work) will reflect his or her own intellectual interests and professional goals.

PREPARATION FOR BIOSTATISTICS
Graduate
This course provides an overview of the fundamental knowledge needed for success in MPH 541: Biostatistics. This course is designed for MPH students only. And for those with no statistical coursework or training.

MPH 501
INTRODUCTION TO PUBLIC HEALTH
Graduate
This course introduces students to the basic tenets of public health, its focus on the prevention of disease and illness, and the promotion of the health and well-being of all people. The course provides a brief history of public health, an introduction to the five core disciplines of public health (epidemiology, biostatistics, environmental health, social and behavioral health, and health policy and management), and an overview of the field’s core functions such as assessment, policy development, and assurance.

MPH 502
INTRODUCTION TO EPIDEMIOLOGY
Graduate
This course will focus on the theories and methods used in the field of epidemiology to study the occurrence, distribution and determinants of infectious and non-infectious diseases, other forms of illness (particularly those impacted by social and environmental forces), and injury in human populations. The focus will be on determining the impact, magnitude, and patterns of disease/illness/injury frequency so that causal agents can be identified and effective prevention, treatment and control measures can be designed and implemented. The course will explore variations of disease/illness/injury in relation to such factors as age, sex, race/ethnicity, occupational and social characteristics, place of residence, social inequality, susceptibility, exposure to specific agents, and other pertinent characteristics. Also of concern will be the temporal distribution of disease, examination of trends, cyclical patterns, and intervals between exposure to causative factors and onset of disease.

MPH 503
INTRODUCTION TO ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH
Graduate
Study of the environment factors that influence health. Topics include air and water pollution, global population and local community dynamics, toxicology, infectious and chemical agents, radiation, and management.

MPH 511
HEALTH AND BEHAVIOR THEORY
Graduate
This course will examine various theories and models that have been developed to identify the range of psychosocial factors that impact participation in both health-threatening and health-enhancing behaviors, and provide guidance for the modification of such behaviors. The theories and models will be explored from multidisciplinary perspectives and will be applied to an array of health issues. Practical applications of these theories to the development and implementations of theory-based public health interventions that can be applied with multiple populations (e.g., women, adolescents, elderly, people of color) within multiple settings (e.g., communities, schools, health care settings) at various levels of change (e.g., individual, community, social, policy) will also be explored. Cross-listed with PSY 511.
RESEARCH METHODS
Graduate
This course will provide a critical examination of the relative strengths and limitations of various research designs, data collection methods, and types of existing data. Students will develop an understanding of (a) the relative contributions of a mixed-methods approach to public health research, (b) basic issues related to the measurement of public health concepts, and (c) the relative strengths and limitations of various analytic approaches to studying public health problems. Students will familiarize themselves with peer-reviewed journals, how to search for material on specific topics, how to develop a critical reader's eye, and how to summarize and draw evidence-based conclusions from multiple studies.

PUBLIC HEALTH ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
This course considers the conceptual and theoretical foundation underlying managerial decision-making. The course introduces students to such basic managerial tools as basic accounting, cost-benefit analysis, budgeting, and marketing. Principles of strategic planning and forecasting are examined. The course goes on to examine the legal framework that governs public health practice, organizations, human resources, research activities, and community as well as individual patient intervention efforts.

MPH 515
PUBLIC HEALTH ETHICS AND POLICY
Graduate
This course is designed to analyze the ethical basis in which public health practice is grounded. It reviews concepts and ideas developed by a number of disciplines including philosophy, law, political science, and economics.

MPH 522
PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT AND GRANT WRITING
Graduate
This course is designed to provide students with the background and skills to develop and evaluate community public health programs in a variety of settings. Students will work individually and as members of teams to design measurable goals, objectives, action plans, timelines, and evaluation indicators of community-based public health programs. Application of methods to logic modeling, proposal writing, budget planning, project management, and data management will be examined throughout the course.

MPH 525
PROGRAM EVALUATION
Graduate
This course will provide students with a comprehensive theoretical, methodological and ethical foundation for conducting public health program evaluation. Students will experience the practice aspects of evaluation including communicating and negotiating with stakeholders, conducting an evaluability assessment, developing logic models and evaluation questions, identifying appropriate data collection methods, gathering reliable and valid evaluation data that are appropriate to the selected design and analysis methods, analyzing data, reporting evaluation results, and ensuring evaluation use. The instructor will facilitate a learning and skill-building environment, drawing on personal experiences and the expertise of others in the field.

BIOSTATISTICS
Graduate
This course emphasizes the application of statistical methods to problems of human health and disease. It covers parametric and nonparametric statistical inferential methods for univariate and bivariate situations using SPSS. Specific topics include but are not limited to the following: Interpretation of graphic and descriptive statistics for both quantitative and categorical data, confidence interval estimation and hypothesis testing methods, linear and multiple regression logistic regression, analysis of categorical data and ANOVA. Course emphasizes the statistical interpretation of the literature and analytic projects based on large data sets from published studies, the internet, or the student's workplace.

GLOBAL HEALTH
Graduate
This course examines theories and data surrounding global health. Topics include epidemiologic transition, the burden of chronic non-communicable diseases in the global south, neglected tropical diseases, and access to medicines. Sociological and anthropological perspectives are explored to understand the structural causes of health inequalities around the world.
MPH 552
MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH
Graduate
This course will utilize a life course perspective to examine contemporary health issues affecting women and children. Students will examine health disparities and social determinants of health, and engage in discourse on a variety of health topics from a social justice framework. Course exercises and assignments will focus on building skills in community assessment, program planning, evaluation, advocacy and policy development, as they apply to maternal and child health.

MPH 553
PUBLIC HEALTH AND FORCED MIGRATION
Graduate
This course is an overview of key public health issues for populations undergoing forced migration. The course emphasizes the contextual factors relevant to the physical and psychosocial challenges faced by displaced populations. Using a community public health approach the course will address: the challenges of health promotion, health care access and delivery; the everyday contexts that affect health; strategies for conducting public health research; and interventions for addressing health outcomes.

MPH 554
INTRODUCTION TO GLOBAL PUBLIC HEALTH
Graduate
This course introduces students to the concepts, principles, and case outcomes of public health practice within a global context. It outlines theories of health, illness behavior, and health education. Across different global settings, it considers community health data sources, health intervention approaches, the planning and evaluation of community health interventions.

MPH 555
EPIDEMIOLOGY IN A GLOBAL CONTEXT
Graduate
This course will focus on the theories and methods used in the field of epidemiology to study the occurrence, distribution and determinants of infectious and non-infectious diseases, other forms of illness (particularly those impacted by social and environmental forces), and injury in human populations. The class examine epidemiology in various global contexts. The focus will be on determining the impact, magnitude, and patterns of disease/illness/injury frequency so that causal agents can be identified and effective prevention, treatment and control measures can be designed and implemented. The course will explore variations of disease/illness/injury in relation to such factors as age, sex, race/ethnicity, occupational and social characteristics, place of residence, social inequality, susceptibility, exposure to specific agents, and other pertinent characteristics. Also of concern will be the temporal distribution of disease, examination of trends, cyclical patterns, and intervals between exposure to causative factors and onset of disease.

MPH 556
WOMEN'S HEALTH
Graduate
An examination of women's health throughout the life cycle, with special emphasis placed on women's structural and societal roles within systems of health and in communities at large, which emphasizes on-going and emerging issues in women's health, such as sexual and reproductive health, contraception, gender-based violence, and chronic diseases, in order to address health disparities and redress health inequalities.

MPH 559
SPECIAL TOPICS IN PUBLIC HEALTH
Graduate
Special courses will be offered as students and faculty affiliated with the MPH program identify selected topics of common interest.

MPH 599
INDEPENDENT STUDY IN PUBLIC HEALTH
Graduate
This course can be taken in consultation with a supervising faculty member.
MPH 600
PREPARATION FOR PUBLIC HEALTH PRACTICE
Graduate
This year-long course includes a series of skills-based workshops designed to introduce students to the specialized skills and competencies needed in the public health workplace. These workshops are designed to complement the core MPH curriculum and are selected based on regular feedback from faculty, public health practitioners, and students.

MPH 602
COMMUNITY HEALTH ASSESSMENT
Graduate
This course is part of a three-course practicum sequence that is designed to provide the student with practical experience in the field based on skills acquired in class. The course introduces students to methods of data collection and analysis of epidemiological data. It focuses on community health indicators and research tools used to assess health data. Emphasis is on the research methods that are employed to identify community assets and goals; this step serves as the basic step in the process of community needs assessment which leads to the final objective, that is, program planning. The fundamentals of various types of community health interventions will be explored.

MPH 603
COMMUNITY HEALTH INTERVENTIONS
Graduate
This is the second course of the three-course practicum sequence. Students are expected to engage in the following tasks: (1) assess the community health profile documenting incidence and prevalence of disease and other health problems; (2) use the findings identified in step one to plan a population-specific community-based health program designed to reduce assessed risk; (3) develop an evaluation instrument designed to determine how successful the plan is in reducing health risk.

MPH 602 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPH 604
CAPSTONE SEMINAR IN COMMUNITY PUBLIC HEALTH
Graduate
This is the third course of the three-course practicum sequence. Students are expected to participate in a seminar, which provides the academic counterpart to the practicum experience. This course focuses on questions that arise related to the data collection process, data analysis and/or interpretation of findings, and the effort to translate findings into the planning of community-based public health programs.

The goal of the final capstone project is to integrate the information that has been learned in the students' MPH academic courses with the applied community experience. Therefore, even though the paper will be focused on the applied work that the students are conducting in their community health setting, this document should also incorporate various elements of the didactic courses that have been taken within the MPH program. The exact format and length of the paper may vary depending on the nature of the applied experience, but should include the following general sections: I. Community Health Profile and Background II. Statement of the Targeted Health Issue (including specific health determinants and/or risk factors) III. Description of the Health Intervention or Program IV. Evaluation or Monitoring Plan and Results V. Implications of Findings VI. Future Directions (including future funding of health initiatives) Students should have an outline project approved by the instructor of the Capstone Seminar prior to writing the final product. This project should demonstrate that the student is able to integrate the knowledge and skills that they have obtained throughout their MPH training to an applied community health issue and setting, and express this integration in a structure written format.

MPH 602 and MPH 603 are prerequisites for this class.

MPH 699
COMMUNITY HEALTH PRACTICUM
Graduate
This year-long course includes a series of skills-based workshops designed to introduce students to the specialized skills and competencies needed in the public health workplace. These workshops are designed to complement the core MPH curriculum and are selected based on regular feedback from faculty, public health practitioners, and students.

MPH 600 is a prerequisite for this course.
MPS 500
INTRODUCTION TO PUBLIC SERVICE MANAGEMENT
Graduate
Introduces students to organizational theories and practices useful to public service managers. Teaches students how to use structural, human resource, political and symbolic perspectives to rethink public service organizations. Provides an introduction to managerial issues including workforce diversity, decision making and leadership; stresses critical thinking and writing skills.

School of Public Service student or department consent is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 501
CROSS-SECTOR ANALYSIS
Graduate
This course examines the size, scope, capacity, and limitations of the nonprofit, government, and business sectors, in the domestic and international context. Students will be introduced to research and become familiar with print and electronic resources and databases. They will learn to develop meaningful research questions, write literature reviews, and analyze the interrelationships among the three sectors.

MPS 510
INTERNATIONAL DIMENSIONS OF PUBLIC SERVICE
Graduate
This course explores the institutional roles and responsibility of international public service organizations in relation to international affairs, peace and security, international development, humanitarian and human rights laws. Through real world case studies students learn about the complex legal, advocacy and capacity development work connected to political, economic, social, cultural and other human rights in international public service.

Status as an MPS student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 511
SUSTAINABLE INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course provides an overview of theories and approaches to sustainable social and economic development and examines the roles of Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) as well as methods of evaluating their effect. The course covers the role of NGOs in building and strengthening sustainable communities and societies in developing countries.

VOLUNTEERISM
Graduate
This course examines the concept of volunteerism within global civil society, especially nonprofit organizations and government associations. This includes an analysis of the role of volunteers in American society, the motivation to volunteer and how to effectively recruit, train, supervise and evaluate volunteers. Students develop an understanding of the role of volunteers in the management of any social program. Assignments include group projects and service learning opportunities.

MPS 514
GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
The basic principles, logic and processes of public budgeting are explored to understand the allocation of scarce resources. The concepts of efficiency and equity in taxation are applied to identify the advantages and disadvantages of specific taxes such as income, sales and property. Specific skill sets include present value techniques, interpreting the basic financial reports generated by governments, and evaluating financial performance of a government based upon its financial reports.

MPS 500 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 515
NONPROFIT FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
This course explores key issues in operations budgeting and capital budgeting. Specific skill sets include cash flow analysis, variance analysis, present value techniques, interpreting financial statements, and evaluating financial performance.

MPS 500 is a prerequisite for this class.
MPS 516
MANAGEMENT OF INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY
Graduate
This course focuses on the management and use of information technology (IT). As the use of IT in society grows, particularly in business, graduates are likely to manage technology resources and participate in IT planning and development projects as founders, sponsors, team members, managers of development, or end-user developers. Students should become effective users of information, IT, and information services. The course explores a number of IT-related topics, such as the strategic role of IT, IT planning and architecture, building the telecommunications highway system, management issues on system development, the expanding universe of computing, group support systems, intelligent systems, electronic document management and managing the human side of systems.

MPS 519
RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course teaches students the theories and techniques of resource development. We discuss the fundraising tradition in the U.S., principal donor types, theories of donor behavior, and the organizational, legal and ethical contexts of fundraising. Students learn basic fundraising tools, including planning, grant writing, special events, major gifts, planned giving, and capital campaigns. Students work as volunteer consultants with nonprofit partners to analyze their current fundraising strategies and materials and help them develop new ones.

MPS 520
VALUES-CENTERED LEADERSHIP
Graduate
This interdisciplinary course explores service leadership through the lenses of Robert K. Greenleaf, The DePaul Leadership Project, Margaret J. Wheatley and other theorists and practitioners within the leadership field. The course expands our thinking on leadership to include modules dedicated to four topics: Service Leadership, Leadership and Diversity, International Leadership and Ethical Leadership. Students will assess their own leadership practices, develop a leadership action plan and participate in coaching, as coach and client. Student grading will be based on participation in self-reflection, course participation, project teams and a final project.

MPS 521
LEADERSHIP AND MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course focuses on key factors which affect employee behavior and the nature and purposes of leader and managerial roles. In addition, it addresses recent research in leadership and management and the legal environment of personnel management. In depth analysis of psychological systems, interpersonal relations and the relationship of rewards to performance are addressed through case studies, role playing and readings.

MPS 522
FUNDAMENTALS OF HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course explores human resource issues facing employees with supervisory responsibilities in public service organizations, including those working in the volunteer, non-profit, religious, government, and education sectors. The course considers human resource planning, employee recruiting and selection, and the motivation and evaluation of staff personnel and managers both individually and in teams. Topics include recruiting and selecting employees and managers, fostering team development, managing employee stress, preventing workplace violence, and handling issues pertaining to termination, training, and development. The course also explores progressive discipline and, improving performance management of employees and volunteers.

School of Public Service student or department consent is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 523
GROUP DYNAMICS FOR LEADERS
Graduate
This interactive course will explore the relevant theories and methods for understanding the structures and processes of groups. The course will also consider how leaders and managers function effectively within groups. An emphasis is placed on role and function, status, power, leadership, communication, decision-making, problem solving, conflict management, negotiation, and coalition.
MPS 524
MARKETING FOR SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS
Graduate
This course provides a broad understanding of marketing nonprofit, governmental, and advocacy organizations. Students learn how to analyze and develop a wide range of marketing plans and campaigns. Content includes the key theories, principles, and techniques of marketing and the differences between for-profit and non-profit efforts. The associated aspects of marketing--public relations, communications, advertising, and fundraising--are explained and compared. Students learn all aspects of the marketing process from identifying and defining the preferred target segments, crafting the key messages, and developing, executing, and measuring effective marketing campaigns.

MPS 525
WORKING WITH NONPROFIT BOARDS
Graduate
This course examines the legal and philosophical reasons that nonprofit organizations are governed by an external board of directors. Membership, structure and process for this body are examined, as well as the relationship of employees to the individual board members and the policies established by this group.

MPS 526
LOCAL GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
This course analyzes decision-making processes used in local government from the perspective of the chief executive officer such as city manager, township supervisor, special district administrator, or park superintendent. It includes operational aspects of municipal administration including the effect of intergovernmental relations on local government, the role of the local government administrator in policy implementation, chief executive and elected official interactions, and regional governance of the delivery of services that cross political boundaries.

MPS 528
FOUNDATION MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course examines the concepts, functions and practices of organized philanthropy, with a primary emphasis on corporate, private and community foundations.

MPS 529
STRATEGIC MANAGEMENT AND PLANNING
Graduate
Students learn how to apply strategic management and planning concepts and tools to public and nonprofit organizations to achieve goals and objectives in meeting service delivery missions, both domestically and internationally. The course focuses on analyzing the interaction of trends, market forces, stakeholders, and core competencies in developing visions and strategies for alternative scenarios.

MPS 530
ANALYSIS OF NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS
Graduate
This course explores the art and science of nonprofit management. Students analyze nonprofits holistically, combining perspectives from law, governance, resource development, and finance. Students learn through hands-on analysis of existing nonprofit organizations and the analysis of historical case studies.

MPS 515 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 531
FINANCING AND COSTING IN HEALTH CARE
Graduate
This course focuses on practical examples of financial management of health care institutions. It examines the financial system supporting health care institutions and the financial tools providers and insurers use to keep medical costs in check. Students learn financial management, third party payment methodologies, Medicare and Medicaid, cost accounting, rate setting, budgeting and financial analysis.

MPS 514 or MPS 515 or MPS 541 is a prerequisite for this course.
MPS 534
MEDICAL SOCIOLOGY
Graduate
Overview of social systems of health care in the United States, including the health-seeking behavior of patients, relationships among health care providers and organizational settings in which services are delivered. Cross-listed with SOC 431.

MPS 535
ISSUES IN HEALTHCARE
Graduate
This seminar focuses on contemporary issues in health care policy and management. Topics covered include public health initiatives, dimensions of health service delivery systems (cost, quality and access), and health policy reforms with a special emphasis on the opportunities to reduce disparities in health care. Students conduct an independent secondary research project on a health care topic of their choosing. Classes include discussions of the challenges of developing expertise in a subfield within the health care sector.

MPS 537
HEALTH CARE DELIVERY SYSTEMS
Graduate
Overview of the structure of the U.S. health systems followed by a selective international comparison of other health delivery systems including their relationships to social policies and economic factors. Cross-listed with SOC 437.

MPS 541
ECONOMIC FOUNDATIONS OF PUBLIC SERVICE
Graduate
This course introduces students to the branches of economics known as microeconomics, public finance, and welfare economics. Students learn to apply standard economic tools to identify policy issues and to analyze them. Specific skill set includes present value techniques.

MPS 500 or SUD 401 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 542
POLICY DESIGN AND ANALYSIS
Graduate
Focuses on the processes and techniques of analyzing and designing public policies. Students are introduced to analytical ways of thinking that include: defining and modeling policy problems; designing policy alternatives; evaluating policy alternatives using ethical, legal, economic, organizational, and political criteria; and anticipating problems of policy implementation.

MPS 501 and (MPS 514 or MPS 515 or MPS 541) are prerequisites for this class.

MPS 543
POLICY IMPLEMENTATION
Graduate
This course introduces students to the challenges and opportunities of policy implementation. It helps students understand and improve the implementation of public and organizational policies. Using a variety of approaches, students learn to analyze implementation, the factors that influence the process, and to monitor, evaluate, revise, and reform policies.

MPS 542 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 546
ADVOCACY AND LOBBYING
Graduate
Explores the roles of individuals and organizations in the public policy process, particularly as power arrangements facilitate or impede consensus building. Examines how legislation is written and how administrative rules are formed in government agencies. Special attention is paid to advocacy techniques such as lobbying, public education, and litigation.
MPS 552
GIS FOR COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course will focus on applications of Geographic Information Systems (GIS) to community studies and community development. As an amalgam of information technologies (e.g. database management, Web 2.0) and earth measurement technologies (e.g. global positioning systems, remote sensing), GIS is rapidly entering the realm of community development. The course will explain how GIS works; enable students to learn techniques including mapping, spatial analysis, and data management; and provide students with the opportunity to apply GIS to community development. Cross-listed with GEO 441.

MPS 559
ENTREPRENEURSHIP AND NEW VENTURE MANAGEMENT
Graduate
Entrepreneurship and New Venture Management. Cross-listed with MGT 570.

MPS 560
ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
Graduate
This course focuses on an understanding of government powers by federal, state and local agencies in the US such as oversights, rule making, adjudication and judicial review of local and federal actions, and enforcement of regulatory decision making. It examines how public administration decisions are affected by existing constitutional and legal constraints on the administrative process; it includes the Administrative Procedure Act, Open Meetings Act of Illinois, and the Freedom of Information Act.

MPS 561
LAW AND NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS
Graduate
Introduces laws and regulations governing nonprofit organizations, including procedures for incorporation, maintenance of tax-exempt status, and compliance with relevant labor laws. No legal background is assumed.

MPS 562
INTRODUCTION TO HEALTH LAW
Graduate
Introduces students from nonlegal backgrounds to the legal system. Examines legal materials, including statutes, judicial opinion, and administrative regulations. Basic legal research and writing skills are taught.

MPS 563
LAW AND PUBLIC POLICY
Graduate
Provides an overview of the legal process, developing a basic understanding of legal principles, terms, and court systems. Applies legal analysis to policy issues in the three sectors. Examines the sources of law and explores methods of legal research within the context of public policy analysis.
MPS 542 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 571
METROPOLITAN PLANNING
Graduate
The purpose of this course is to provide an introduction to the professional practice of urban planning and the basic theoretical concepts on which the discipline is based. Students will analyze urban issues, decision-making processes, and resources that affect planning across a metropolitan area, including urban-suburban relations, and the complexities of zoning, economic and community development.

MPS 572
URBAN POVERTY SEMINAR
Graduate
This course explores causes of urban poverty both in the US and abroad. It compares and contrasts policies addressing basic human needs. It includes discussion of global cities and international poverty reduction programs.
MPS 573
URBAN AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course discusses urban issues including social area analysis, neighborhood change, land use and other topics. It examines community organizations as problem-solving bodies that interact with government agencies to affect urban development.

MPS 575
SEM I N A R I N A D M I N I S T R AT I O N / B R U S S E L S
Graduate
This course increases understanding and knowledge of the European Union and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as organizations of change. It focuses on the international public sector including relationships with NGO’s and the nonprofit sector. Students expand experiential and intellectual understanding of these global actors and how they compare to the US. The course takes place in Brussels.

MPS 586
RESEARCH METHODS I, INTRODUCTION TO APPLIED RESEARCH AND STATISTICS
Graduate
This course introduces students to the underlying principles of scientific and applied research. It covers both qualitative and quantitative approaches and teaches students to collect and analyze data. Students learn about research ethics, causality, sampling (both random and purposive), and the techniques of survey design. Students calculate descriptive and inferential statistics using statistical software. Students learn applied program research, including developing and evaluating program theory and processes.

MPS 586 and (MPS 514 or MPS 515 or MPS 541 or status as an IPS student) are prerequisites for this class.

MPS 587
RESEARCH METHODS II, ADVANCED APPLIED RESEARCH AND STATISTICS
Graduate
This course introduces students to more advanced mixed methods of scientific research including interviews and focus groups, observation, and ethnography. Students learn about the design of experiments and the problems associated with spuriousness and control. Students calculate and interpret bivariate and multivariate statistics using statistical software. Students learn applied research, including needs assessment and outcomes evaluations. Students develop their own research proposal for their capstone or thesis project.

MPS 587 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 588
INTRODUCTION TO RESEARCH AND STATISTICS FOR MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course develops the skills necessary for understanding scientific research and conducting applied research through surveys, interviews, and focus groups. Students learn to calculate basic statistics using Excel and understand descriptive and inferential statistics. Students learn applied program research, including developing and evaluating program theory and processes.

MPS 588 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 589
ADVANCED RESEARCH METHODS AND STATISTICS FOR MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course continues the study of scientific research begun in MPS 588 and introduces more advanced topics, including experimental designs and statistical control. It teaches applied methods, including needs assessment, outcomes measurement, and impact evaluations, and introduces participatory action research. Students develop their own research proposal for their capstone or thesis project.

MPS 589 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 593
INTEGRATIVE SEMINAR
Graduate
In this capstone course students complete an action research project integrating applied research, theoretical frameworks, and professional practice.

(MPS 586 and MPS 587) or (MPS 588 and MPS 589) are a prerequisite for this class.
MPS 594
ETHICAL LEADERSHIP IN PUBLIC SERVICE
Graduate
This course provides students with the framework for personal and professional ethical decision making applied in the context of diverse workplaces and international organizations. Through lectures on ethical theories, case studies in applied ethics, and specific assignments, students clarify their personal-professional values, assess their moral intelligence, and develop their ethical leadership integrity. Students will also study the ethics of organizations, including the formation of social norms, how they influence individual decisions, and how entire organizations can become more ethical.

MPS 586 or MPS 588 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 597
PUBLIC SERVICE FELLOWS SEMINAR
Graduate
Elective available to students with MPS CGPA of 3.75 or greater. For MPS Fellows taking MPS 593, Integrated Seminar, or MPS 598, Thesis Research I, during the academic year, meets roughly every other week during winter and spring terms. Seminar includes distinguished academic and professional guest lectures and presentations of research by Fellows.

THESIS
Graduate
Students carry out a theoretically-based research project designed in the research sequence. The final product of this course is a master's thesis.

(MPS 586 and MPS 587) or (MPS 588 and MPS 589) are a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 600
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Individually supervised learning experience, usually involving extensive library research and writing. Variable credit.

MPS 601
INTERNSHIP
Graduate
Supervised work experience during one or more quarters, usually involving application of administrative skills in an organizational setting new to the student.

MPS 602
CANDIDACY CONTINUATION
Graduate
Required of students who are not registered for regular courses during an academic quarter while completing course requirements or research.

MPS 603
CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE
Graduate
Placeholder course for students NOT actively working on their thesis. This course is meant only to maintain university student status, it will not give the student full- or part-time student status.

SPECIAL TOPICS
Graduate
Topics vary each term. (May be taken more than once).
MPS 606
LEADERSHIP IN HIGHER EDUCATION ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
This course introduces students to the organization and management of institutions of higher education with an emphasis on the administrative structures and functions of colleges and universities, as well as organizational theory as it applies to institutions of higher education. This course explores topics such as leadership, governance, strategic planning and budgeting, and human resource management, and also introduces students to allied higher education research and advocacy organizations.

MPS 607
SPECIAL TOPICS IN HIGHER EDUCATION ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
This course allows students to explore topics of current concern in the field of higher education in depth. Topics that may be addressed in this course include higher education finance, higher education law, diversity in higher education, enrollment management and marketing in higher education, and politics and policy in higher education. This course is an elective, repeatable for credit, in the Higher Education Concentration. MPS 500 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 608
SEMINAR IN HIGHER EDUCATION ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
This course provides the opportunity for students to discuss and develop a greater understanding of issues of current concern in higher education. This course may explore issues of critical concern that take from current research and practice in the field and will allow students to integrate knowledge drawn from across the MPS program to the study of current issues in higher education. MPS 500 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 610
INTERNATIONAL PROFESSIONAL INTERNSHIP
Graduate
The internship consists of work experience supervised by a site supervisor in an international or cross-cultural organization during one or more terms and involving the application of administrative skills in an organization new to the student. Students may take internship abroad or in the US.

MPS 611
MANAGEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL NGOs
Graduate
This course examines management skills and trends of international nongovernmental organizations. Through specific case studies in the fields of international public service, development and emergency, students learn current techniques to effectively manage projects, relations and operations of international non-governmental programs and development projects.

MPS 612
INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY
Graduate
This course provides an overview of major theories and practice in international political economy. It includes critical analysis of international political economy such as growth theories, capital and labor flows, and transformation of regimes. Students develop analytical skills for professional interests and research purposes.

MPS 613
COMPARATIVE PUBLIC POLICY
Graduate
Through comparative methods, this course examines cross-national social policy research and practices. Through case study analysis students learn about comparative welfare state research and reflect on major theoretical and methodological aspects of social policy. North American public policy approaches are compared and contrasted with European, Asian, African and Latin American policies on education, health care, housing, social security, labor market and other policy fields.
MPS 614
INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS SEMINAR
Graduate
This seminar introduces students to the contemporary international affairs of the United Nations and connected agencies, programs and organizations. Through conferences with high level UN representatives, students gain an inside view of this complex inter-governmental organization in its operations for peace and security, poverty reduction and development, human rights and humanitarian affairs and international relations and international law.

MPS 615
MANAGEMENT OF INTERCULTURAL DIVERSITY
Graduate
This course provides the necessary conceptual foundation and practical skills for leading, managing and communicating in a cross-cultural and diverse working environment. Students learn intercultural competency through applications and examples on international relations and human resource management.

MPS 616
INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS AND CONFLICT MANAGEMENT
Graduate
The course focuses on theoretical foundations and practical implications of diplomacy, negotiation, mediation and peace-building to solve and prevent conflicts. It offers reflective practices and concrete directions for creating constructive solutions to interpersonal, inter-group, and international conflict.

MPS 554
PRINCIPLES OF EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AND PLANNING
Graduate
Examines the theory and practice of strategic and operational planning for emergency management planning and response. Surveys government, nonprofit, and private sector activities in emergency and crisis management and policy. Reviews the principles associated with evaluation of risk and the formulation of prevention programs. Identifies the issues and policy responses necessary to achieve coordination of agencies and collaboration with appropriate private resources. The course will be organized around case study examination and table top scenario activities in order to apply concepts in practice.

MPS 564
PUBLIC SAFETY ADMINISTRATION AND PLANNING
Graduate
This course covers management strategies and selected analytic tools for the administration of public safety agencies. Management, planning and coordination issues will be addressed across different governmental structures (federal, state, county, local and sub-local); as well as different functional areas across public safety operations, such as staffing/personnel management; special event planning/operations; interagency coordination; effective community partnership planning; and public communications.

MPS 532
GRANTS AND CONTRACTS IN PUBLIC MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This class will cover the grant and contracting components of emergency preparedness. Students will learn about government and non-government grants, including how to search for Federal grants. In addition, the class will learn about the role contracts plays in emergency preparedness.

MSC 111
OFFICERSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY
Undergraduate
The purpose of this class is to introduce cadets/students to the fundamental components of service as an officer in the United States Army. These initial lessons form the building blocks of progressive lessons in values, fitness, leadership, and officership. Additionally the class addresses "life skills" including fitness, communications theory and practice (written and oral), and interpersonal relationships.
MSC 112
PROBLEM SOLVING AND DECISION MAKING
Undergraduate
This course is an introduction to the "life skills" of problem solving, decision-making and leadership. The course is designed to help students in the near-term as leaders on campus. The class will help students be more effective leaders and managers in the long-term, whether they serve in the military or the civilian sector. Topics addressed include critical thinking, problem solving methods, leadership theory, followership, group cohesion, goal setting, and feedback mechanisms. Lessons are taught in a seminar format, emphasizing student discussions and practical exercises.

MSC 113
FUNDAMENTALS OF LEADERSHIP
Undergraduate
This course provides cadets/students an introduction to the critical topic of leadership. The course seeks to convince cadets/students that they can learn to be better leaders than they are now (i.e. leaders aren't born they are developed), and to provide them with a model for understanding their development as leaders.

MSC 151
PHYSICAL READINESS I
Undergraduate
Introduction to the principles of fitness: a fast-paced military-style interval training class that incorporates calisthenics and an emphasis on a healthy life style. Students will undergo an evaluation of their physical fitness level and it's progression over the course of the quarter.

MSC 211
LEADERSHIP AND PROBLEM SOLVING
Undergraduate
The purpose of this class is to introduce cadets/students to principal leadership instruction of the Basic Course. Building upon the fundamentals introduced in the MSC 100 level classes, this instruction delves into several aspects of communication and leadership theory.

MSC 212
MILITARY PRINCIPLES OF TACTICS
Undergraduate
This quarter focuses principally on officership, providing an extensive examination of the unique purpose, roles, and obligations of commissioned officers. It includes a detailed look at the origin of our institutional values and their practical application in decision-making and leadership. The lesson traces the Army's successes and failure as it evolved from the Vietnam War to the present.

MSC 213
OFFICERSHIP CASE STUDY
Undergraduate
This course builds on the MS I year's introduction to officership and provides an extensive examination of the unique purpose, roles, and obligations of commissioned officers. The aim is to convey a clear and complete understanding of what it means to be a commissioned officer. Special emphasis is given to the officer's role in shaping and guiding the growth and evolution of the Army through decisions, policies, and personal example.

MSC 252
PHYSICAL READINESS II
Undergraduate
Introduction to the principles of fitness: a fast-paced military-style interval training class that incorporates calisthenics and an emphasis on a healthy life style. Students will undergo an evaluation of their physical fitness level and it's progression over the course of the quarter.

MSC 277
WAR & PEACE IN THE MODERN AGE
Undergraduate
A survey of military history from 1648 to the present with emphasis on the relationship between armed forces and the societies that create them, the impact of technology on warfare, and efforts to limit deadly conflict.
MSC 321
FUNDAMENTALS OF MILITARY LEADERSHIP AND TRAINING
Undergraduate
Instruction and case studies, which build leadership competencies and military skills in preparation for further responsibilities as Army Officers. Specific instruction in the principles of war, decision-making processes, planning models, and risk assessment. Advanced leadership instruction focuses on motivational theory, the role and actions of leaders, and organizational communications. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322
ORGANIZATIONAL LEADERS
Undergraduate
Specific instruction is given in individual leader development, planning and execution of small unit operations, individual and team development, and the Army as a career choice. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 321 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSC 323
ADVANCED LEADERSHIP
Undergraduate
This course builds upon the previous lessons while introducing advanced leadership theories on motivation, leader modeling, and the role of a leader in an organization. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSC 341
COORDINATE ACTIVITIES WITH STAFFS
Undergraduate
This module consists of four lessons designed to give the cadet an understanding and appreciation of the critical importance that staff organization, planning, and coordination play in the success or failure of military operations. The module uses historical case studies initially to illustrate these points then transitions to provide an overview of staff fundamentals and principles contained in field manual FM 101-5. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322 or MSC 323 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSC 342
ETHICAL IMPE RADIVES FOR THE JUNIOR OFFICER
Undergraduate
This six-lesson module on ethics builds upon previous instruction presented in the Basic Course and the MS III year. These lessons further strengthen character and values within the cadets, increase their understanding of the Army's consideration of others' expectations, and improve their capacity to make correct decisions when presented with an ethical or moral dilemma. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322 or MSC 323 is a prerequisite for this class.

ADVANCED MILITARY TOPICS
Undergraduate
This course builds upon the previous MS IV lessons while introducing advanced leadership theories on motivation, leader modeling, and the role of a leader in an organization. It will also address the responsibility and process of a leader on how to assess and apply risk assessment within the organization. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 353
PHYSICAL READINESS III
Undergraduate
Introduction to the principles of fitness: a fast-paced military-style interval training class that incorporates calisthenics and an emphasis on a healthy life style. Students will undergo an evaluation of their physical fitness level and it's progression over the course of the quarter.
MSC 399
MILITARY THEORY
Undergraduate
(Independent Study) Intensive research and study of one or more selected topics. The topics and research methodology are determined in consultation with the instructor. May be repeated for maximum of six credit hours.

MSW 401
PROFESSIONAL WRITING AND DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
The practice of professional social work requires accurate and persuasive communication in multiple formats. This required, foundation-level course is designed to introduce students to the major possibilities and constraints of professional writing and other forms of communication as well as survey the career paths available to professional social workers. There is an emphasis on writing for professional settings including case studies, mandated reports, summaries, and professional publication.

MSW 411
HUMAN BEHAVIOR AND THE SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT I
Graduate
This is the first course of a two-part sequence designed to develop an understanding about human behavior and the social environment; the course offers an ecosystems framework and method for understanding human behavior within the context of personal, family, group and community systems. Using a bio-psycho-social theoretical framework, fundamental concepts and theories are introduced with the life cycle serving as the organizational focus. The course covers the first half of the life span: conception, infancy, childhood, adolescence and young adulthood.

MSW 412
HUMAN BEHAVIOR AND THE SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT II
Graduate
This is the second course of a two-part sequence designed to develop an understanding about human behavior and the social environment; the course offers an ecosystems framework and method for understanding human behavior within the context of personal, family, group and community systems, organizations, and institutions. Using a bio-psycho-social theoretical framework, fundamental concepts and theories are introduced with the life cycle serving as the organizational focus. The course covers the second half of the life span: young adulthood, middle adulthood, later adulthood and end of life.

MSW 411 and status as a MSW degree-seeking student or instructor consent are a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 421
INTRODUCTION TO SOCIAL WORK RESEARCH
Graduate
This course presents the conceptual foundations and methods of research needed in order to assist students with integrating research knowledge and professional social work practice. It presents social justice as an overarching paradigm in the study of social work research. MSW 421 presents the conceptual foundations and methods of research in order to assist students with integrating research knowledge with professional social work practice and ethics. The course focuses on the quantitative and qualitative methods. The course covers the research process from problem identification through the conceptualization of research questions, sampling, design, measurement, data collection, analysis, and dissemination of findings. Additionally the course pays specific attention to ethics in research and issues of race, class, gender and sexual orientation. As an alternative to the quantitative research method, the course touches briefly on qualitative methods. The course makes use of examples and readings that focus on conducting research with individuals, families, and communities in urban environments. Students engage in a critical analysis of the quantitative research method and consider alternative methods of developing knowledge as it pertains to social work. Additionally, the course provides a basic coverage of data analysis using both the quantitative and qualitative research methods with the goal of developing student's conceptual understanding and ability to critically interpret research findings.

Status as a MSW degree seeking student is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 431
SOCIAL WELFARE POLICY I
Graduate
This foundation-level course is designed to provide students with the entry-level knowledge of social work ethics and values, policy formation and analysis, and practice skills necessary to impact and interpret the rules and regulations surrounding social welfare. Emphasis is placed on understanding political processes at the agency, local, regional and federal level and attention is given to economic considerations as well as the unique role of social welfare policy in regulating the lives of clients, particularly those from historically oppressed groups. This course is the first of two required social welfare policy courses for MSW degree candidates.
MSW 432
ADVANCED SOCIAL WELFARE POLICY II
Graduate
This is the second of two required Social Welfare Policy Courses in the MSW curriculum. This concentration course focuses on policy practice (including advocacy) skills in agencies and organizations. While including a review of analytical techniques, there is emphasis in this course on the human interactions which shape policy review and implementation. Only students who have successfully completed MSW 431 and the Foundation Practice and Field Education Sequence (MSW 481 thru 483 and MSW 491 thru 493) can be enrolled in this course.

MSW 431 or advanced standing is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 450
SPECIAL TOPICS IN SOCIAL WORK
Graduate
See schedule for current offerings. Graduate standing required.

MSW 481
FOUNDATION PRACTICE I
Graduate
This course is the first in a series of three required foundational courses (MSW 481, MSW 482 and MSW 483) designed to equip students with the basic theoretical knowledge, analytical skills, practice skills, and values needed to practice generalist social work with diverse individuals and families in an urban context. The course is grounded in an empowerment model with an emphasis on social justice and the Vincentian values of respect, advocacy, service, and inventiveness. The course will explore the implementation of the ecosystems perspective as it applies to a generalist practice. The course will also cover the relationship between professional and personal values, social work ethics, assessment, relationship building, implementing change strategies, and practice evaluation. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 491 (Foundation Field Education I) and is required of all students enrolled in the first year field sequence.

Declared MSW student and department permission are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 482
FOUNDATION PRACTICE II
Graduate
This course is the second in a series of three required foundational courses (MSW 481, MSW 482 and MSW 483) designed to equip students with the basic theoretical knowledge, analytical skills, practice skills, and values needed to practice generalist social work with groups in an urban context. The course will emphasize the development, implementation, and evaluation of various forms of therapeutic groups along with some content on organizational task groups. Task groups will be covered more thoroughly in MSW 483. The course is grounded in an empowerment model with an emphasis on social justice and the Vincentian values of respect, advocacy, service, and inventiveness. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 492 (Foundation Field Education II) and is required of all students enrolled in the first year field sequence.

MSW 481 and department permission are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 483
FOUNDATION PRACTICE III
Graduate
This course is the third in a series of three required foundational courses (MSW 481, MSW 482 and MSW 483) designed to equip students with the basic theoretical knowledge, analytical skills, practice skills, and values needed to practice generalist social work within communities and organizations. Specifically, this course introduces skills associated with task groups which serve to meet client needs in communities and organizations. The course is grounded in the empowerment model with an emphasis on social justice and the Vincentian values of respect, advocacy, service, and inventiveness. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 493 (Foundation Field Education III) and is required of all students enrolled in the first year field sequence.

MSW 482 and department permission are prerequisites for this course.
MSW 484
ADVANCED STANDING FOUNDATION PRACTICE
Graduate
This course is required for all Advanced Standing students and may be taken as an elective (with its co-requisite course, MSW 494) with permission of the Instructor. This course must be taken with MSW 494. This course is designed to equip students with the basic theoretical knowledge, analytical skills, practice skills, and values needed to prepare for advanced, community practice in social work. The course is grounded in the empowerment model with an emphasis on social justice and other Vincentian values. Additionally, it gives particular attention to the importance of diversity, including race/ethnicity, gender, economic class, disability, and sexual orientation in the context of social work macro practice. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 494 (Advanced Standing Foundation Field Education).

(MSW 483 and MSW 493) or MSW advanced standing is a prerequisite for this course.

MSW 491
FOUNDATION FIELD EDUCATION I
Graduate
This course is designed to support students in their Foundation Year of Field Education, and to complement the Foundation Year Sequence. Students will be provided with the opportunity to apply the beginning skills and knowledge needed to professionally aid individuals and families using the bio-psycho-social model and the empowerment approach, and introduce key components of field work and working with community organizations and social service agencies. This course is the first of three field education courses which are required of all MSW degree students. Concurrent enrollment in MSW 481 and confirmation of field placement for current academic year are required. The process for field placement and supporting policies are further articulated in the student handbook and the field education manual.

Declared MSW student and department permission are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 492
FOUNDATION FIELD EDUCATION II
Graduate
This course is designed to support students in their Foundation Year of Field Education, and to complement the Foundation Year Sequence. Students will be provided with the opportunity to apply the beginning skills and knowledge needed to professionally aid individuals and families using the bio-psycho-social model and the empowerment approach, and introduce key components of field work and working with community organizations and social service agencies. This course is the second of three field education courses which are required of all MSW degree students. Concurrent enrollment in MSW 482 and confirmation of field placement for current academic year are required. The process for field placement and supporting policies are further articulated in the student handbook and the field education manual.

MSW 491 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 493
FOUNDATION FIELD EDUCATION III
Graduate
This course is designed to support students in their Foundation Year of Field Education, and to complement the Foundation Year Sequence. Students will be provided with the opportunity to apply the beginning skills and knowledge needed to professionally aid individuals, families, and groups using the bio-psycho-social model and the empowerment approach, and introduce key components of field work and working with community organizations and social service agencies. This course is the third of three foundation field education courses which are required of all MSW degree students. Concurrent enrollment in MSW 483 and continuation in field placement for current academic year are required. The process for field placement and supporting policies are further articulated in the field education manual.

MSW 492 and department permission are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 494
ADVANCED STANDING FOUNDATION FIELD EDUCATION
Graduate
This field education course is required for all Advanced Standing students and may be taken as an elective (with its co-requisite course, MSW 484) with permission of the Instructor. The course must be taken with MSW 484. This course also requires enrollment in an approved field agency placement for the entire summer session. Students are required to complete a minimum of 150 contact hours at the agency. This course is designed to assist students with processing the many theoretical, analytical, and practice skills needed to prepare for community practice, an advanced approach to social work. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 484 (Advanced Foundation Practice).

MSW 499
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Individually-supervised learning experience, usually involving extensive research and written analysis.
This course offers a comprehensive overview of how program evaluation fits in today's social service environment. It presents social justice as an overarching paradigm in the study of program evaluation. The course will cover three methods of program evaluation: needs assessments, outcome evaluations, and process evaluations. The course will also cover the history of evaluation and ethical considerations related to race, ethnicity and sexual orientation and emphasize the role of program evaluation with community-based organizations that exist in an urban context. Practical issues related to organizational mission, staff resistance, resource demands and evaluation ethics will be covered in order to offer a reality-based perspective on conducting program evaluation.

Declared MSW student and MSW 421 are prerequisites for this course.

This course introduces students to creating, implementing and adjusting budgets within agencies and programs which serve people, as well as program marketing and fundraising (including grant writing). This course is taken either concurrently with MSW 582 (Community Practice II) or before advanced field education. MSW 521 emphasizes budget preparation, fund acquisition and fund distribution. Successful completion of MSW 501 (Program Evaluation) is required for this course, as is the successful completion of the MSW research course (MSW 421). This course builds upon the constructs introduced in the advanced practice sequence. This course introduces students to budgetary operations and the ethical, value-based planning and decision making processes by which social workers must implement fiscal and administrative decisions.

MSW 421, (MSW 483 or MSW 484), (MSW 493 or MSW 494) and MSW 501 are a prerequisite for this class.

Using select theoretical approaches, including empowerment practice, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice in community-serving agencies and organizations. The emphasis in this course, which represents the first of three consecutive, required (advanced) practice courses, is on leadership and management of human service organizations. This course introduces students to the knowledge, skills and professional values essential to leadership of community-based or community-serving programs and organizations. This course covers leadership theories, styles, and techniques; supervision and facilitation; and the critical role(s) leadership play(s) in agency and program administration. Special attention is paid to the unique considerations of people with diverse backgrounds (and representatives of other marginalized groups) in leadership positions as well as working towards the promotion of social and economic justice. It is required that this course be taken concurrently with MSW 591 (Advanced Field Education I).

(MSW 483 or MSW 484) and (MSW 493 or MSW 494) are prerequisites for this course.

Using select theoretical approaches, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice in community-serving agencies and organizations. The emphasis in this course, which represents the second of three consecutive, required (advanced) practice courses, is on program planning. This course introduces students to the skills and knowledge needed to plan and design programs in community-based, people-serving organizations, starting with problem analysis and needs assessment. Related topics such as understanding the multiple dimensions of social problems, operationalizing concerns, and the importance of collaboration and addressing diverse groups' needs within a community practice framework are also addressed. Measures for accountability and effectiveness, especially for professional social workers, are also addressed. Attention is also given to the needs of historically-marginalized groups and planning for full social and economic justice. It is required that this course be taken concurrently with MSW 592 (Advanced Field Education II).

MSW 581 is a prerequisite for this class.
MSW 583
COMMUNITY PRACTICE III
Graduate
Using select theoretical approaches, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice in community-serving agencies and organizations. The emphasis in this course, which represents the final of three consecutive, required (advanced) practice courses is on resource development and marketing. This course continues facilitation in planning and designing programs in community-based or community-serving organizations while also providing students with opportunities to integrate fund development, program evaluation, and effective stewardship of resources to leverage lasting social change, especially on behalf of historically-oppressed communities. Additional related topics include analysis of organizational change, partnerships, strategic planning, and quality assurance. It is required that this course be taken concurrently with MSW 593 (Advanced Field Education III).

MSW 582 is a prerequisite for this course.

MSW 591
ADVANCED FIELD EDUCATION I
Graduate
This course is the first in the final, three-part advanced field education sequence. This course also requires enrollment in an approved field agency placement for the entire academic year. The process for field placement and supporting policies are further articulated in the student handbook and the field education manual. This course is designed to assist students in processing the many theoretical, analytical, and practice skills needed to practice advanced social work in community settings. Attention is also paid to the unique considerations of women and representatives of other historically-marginalized groups in organizational leadership roles through required learning objectives and tasks.

MSW 581 is a corequisite for this class.

MSW 592
ADVANCED FIELD EDUCATION II
Graduate
This course is the second in the final, three-part advanced field education sequence. This course also requires enrollment in an approved field agency placement for the entire academic year. The process for field placement and supporting policies are further articulated in the student handbook and the field education manual. MUS 280
POPULAR MUSIC OF AFRICA
Undergraduate
This course surveys a wide variety of popular music genres, songs, and performers from the continent of Africa. Students will learn about the cultural context and history of various pop music genres as well as how to recognize key stylistic features.

MUS 281
OPERA
Undergraduate
This class surveys the history and styles of opera from its beginning through the present, with a focus on examples from the 18th through the 20th centuries. While students will learn to identify major operatic styles, a major focus of the course will be the contribution music makes to drama in the context of opera. We will work on developing a vocabulary for discussing the music of opera and its interaction with the stories opera tells.

MUS 282
LOVE SONGS
Undergraduate
This course will investigate case studies of love songs in the Western tradition, considering contemporary conventions, the response of composers and poets to expectations, and the relation between first-person song and autobiography. In this interdisciplinary class, students will explore the historically contingent nature of musical and poetic convention, changing ideas of love and gender relationships, and the importance of biography in the reception of love songs. While the course will have a broad historical scope, an emphasis on modern popular music will allow students to apply critical reading and listening skills to the music they already appreciate.

MUS 303
BASIC CONDUCTING PRACTICUM
Undergraduate
An introduction to ensemble conducting. Students will learn to prepare a score and to execute a rehearsal with a live ensemble. Topics include score study, rehearsal skills, critical listening skills, and physical conducting skills. This course must be taken concurrently with Basic Conducting (MUS 304).

MUS 304
BASIC CONDUCTING
Undergraduate
An introduction to ensemble conducting. Students will learn to prepare a score and to execute a rehearsal with a live ensemble. Topics include score study, rehearsal skills, critical listening skills, and physical conducting skills. COREQUISITE: Basic Conducting Practicum (MUS 303).

MUS 305
MUSICAL ENCOUNTERS OF THE PORTUGUESE EMPIRE
Undergraduate
This course explores the role that music played in encounters between Europeans traveling on behalf of the Portuguese Empire and the cultures colonized by the Portuguese beginning in fifteenth century and continuing today in post-colonial contexts. This course will also examine the musical genres that developed as a result of cross-cultural contact. Musical case studies are selected from different historical periods and diverse cultures and geographical areas encompassed by the Portuguese Empire: Portugal, Asia, Africa, and South America. This class will include listening and reading assignments, and students will have the opportunity to further explore an area of interest in a research project on a topic of their choice. Arts and Literature.
MUS 306
PUNK ROCK THROUGH THE YEARS: ISSUES & AESTHETICS
Undergraduate
This course explores the aesthetic, political, and social issues that have shaped the development of punk rock and its various sub-genres in the United States and the United Kingdom since the early 1970's.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 308
ANALYTICAL TECHNIQUES
Undergraduate
Investigation of various analytical approaches to music syntax, structure, style and texture (including timbral and vocal or instrumental configurations) as exhibited in representative compositions from late Baroque to the 20th century. Intended for Bachelor of Arts majors.

MUS 309 is prerequisite for this class.

MUS 309
PERFORMANCE PRACTICE AND CRITIQUE
Undergraduate
This course will provide students with additional performance opportunities and will give them a chance to get critique from people not playing their instrument and, therefore, without the sympathy to its technical demands. Additionally, they will learn to criticize their peers in an appropriate and focused manner and will become better acquainted with the specifics of other instruments.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 310
INTRODUCTION TO ETHNOMUSICOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to the discipline of ethnomusicology, the study of why and how people around the world experience music. Students explore key themes and research methodology of ethnomusicology through selected readings, sound recordings, documentary film, live performances, site visits, and class discussions. Students complete an independent fieldwork project.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 360
TOPICS IN MUSICIANSHIP
Undergraduate
An in-depth investigation of a topic in musicianship studies.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 379
BAROQUE MUSIC
Undergraduate
(2 hours) This course is concerned with the history and development of musical styles and procedures during the Baroque period, with reference to significant compositions, musical examples, and recordings.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 381
HISTORY OF OPERA
Undergraduate
A history of opera from the 17th century to the present. Emphasis on the development of musical style with particular reference to significant operas, musical examples, and recordings.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.
MUS 386
MUSIC SINCE WORLD WAR II
Undergraduate
This course is concerned with the history and development of musical styles and procedures during the post World War II period, with reference to significant compositions, musical examples, and recordings.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 387
EARLY 20TH CENTURY MUSIC
Undergraduate
This course is concerned with the history and development of musical styles and procedures during the early 20th Century, with reference to significant compositions, musical examples, and recordings.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 395
SENIOR CAPSTONE SEMINAR
Undergraduate
This course is designed to fulfill the senior capstone experience for School of Music Bachelors of Arts students only. Students will develop a final project, culminating their musical studies in relationship to their liberal arts studies. The individual projects should reflect an advanced level of musical understanding, scholarship, and writing. The School of Music faculty member will meet with the students in a biweekly seminar throughout the quarter, and on an individual basis as needed.

Status as a Bachelor of Arts in Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 398
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
An in-depth study of a musicianship topic under the supervision of a faculty member. (Departmental permission required).

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 400
MUSIC RESEARCH
Graduate
Introduction to music research types and techniques; bibliography and bibliographical sources; the development of writing skills; analysis of research examples.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 408
ANALYTICAL TECHNIQUES
Graduate
Investigation of various analytical approaches to music syntax, structure, style and texture (including timbral and vocal or instrumental configurations) as exhibited in representative compositions from many historical periods. Intended as an overview of theory/analysis for graduate students.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 409
PERFORMANCE PRACTICE AND CRITIQUE
Graduate
This course will provide students with additional performance opportunities and will give them a chance to get critique from people not playing their instrument and, therefore, without the sympathy to its technical demands. Additionally, they will learn to criticize their peers in an appropriate and focused manner and will become better acquainted with the specifics of other instruments.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.
MUS 420
HISTORY OF THE ORATORIO
Graduate
An analytical and historical study of oratorio literature from 1600 to the present.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 435
18th & 19th WIND HISTORY AND LITERATURE
Graduate
A historical connection exists between wind music of the ancient and medieval periods, and the music of today. This course will trace that historical line, focusing on the 18th & 19th Centuries. The development of repertoire as well as the functions and uses of wind music will be explored. It is the intention of this class to address the needs of people who will perform, conduct, or teach "classical" wind music as part of a career. Emphasis will be placed on original music suitable for professional concert performance.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 436
20th CENTURY WIND HISTORY AND LITERATURE
Graduate
The role of this course is to inform students of the development of wind music through the exploration of ensemble size and instrumentation, civic or artistic purpose, influential composers and conductors, and specific repertoire.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 460
TOPICS IN MUSICIANSHIP
Graduate
An in-depth investigation of a topic in musicianship studies.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 475
MEDIEVAL MUSIC
Graduate
Historical survey of music from the Middle Ages: sacred and secular music as artistic, theoretical, and intellectual expression of the Middle Ages; history of musical styles to 1420; performance practice issues.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 478
RENAISSANCE MUSIC
Graduate
Historical survey of music from the Renaissance. Musical style, compositional procedures, and performance practice are studied, within the social, political and economic environment in which the composers worked.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 479
BAROQUE MUSIC
Graduate
Historical survey of Baroque music and performance practice. Representative examples of both vocal and instrumental music are studied, mostly using the analytical techniques of the period, with the aim of becoming familiar with the most significant manners of composition of Baroque composers.

Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.
MUS 481
HISTORY OF OPERA
Graduate
The course surveys the history of opera in western culture from its beginnings in the 17th century through the 20th century. The class materials cover stylistic trends and genres as demonstrated through seminal works. Each class period will contain a relevant analytical study.
Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 482
WORLD MUSIC CULTURES
Graduate
This graduate course will provide a global musical perspective and widen the lens through which students experience music. Through lectures, listening, guest performances, and engaging discussion students will gain rich insights into new worlds of music.
Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 484
CLASSICAL MUSIC
Graduate
Traces the development of musical style during the Classical Era through the analytical study of examples in the principal musical forms such as sonata form. Reception and performance practice then and now will be addressed.
Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 485
ROMANTIC MUSIC
Graduate
Survey of nineteenth century music through a close analysis of representative Romantic works. The course will cover the expansion of both harmonic language and form leading to their eventual breakdown and reinterpretation.
Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 486
MUSIC SINCE WORLD WAR II
Graduate
This course surveys Western art music and related theoretical and technical issues from near the end of World War II to the present focusing on the development of new musical languages, new instruments and new methods of analysis.
Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 487
20TH CENTURY MUSIC BEFORE WWII
Graduate
This course surveys Western art music and related theoretical and technical issues from near the end of the 19th century to World War II, focusing on the new musical languages and aesthetics developed from 1890 until 1940.
Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 498
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
An in-depth study of a musicianship topic under the supervision of a faculty member. (Departmental permission required).
Status as a Graduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.
MUS 277
GUIDE TO MUSIC THEORY II
Undergraduate
The advanced study of notation and elemental theory for non-music majors. Online drills and short composition studies will be included as course activities.

NMS 501
PROSEMINAR IN NEW MEDIA STUDIES
Graduate
Introduces the field of New Media Studies and the faculty who teach in it. Each week a different NMS faculty member will present his or her research and relate that topic to the wider field of NMS. Encourages students to clarify their course of study and build alliances with faculty and students with similar interests.

NMS 502
NEW MEDIA, OLD MEDIA
Graduate
New Media, Old Media offers a critical examination of the rise of the information age and its impact on old media. This course will situate the NMS program in the historical/critical development of mass media and its relationship to power and meaning-making.

NMS 504
TEXT AND IMAGE
Graduate
In this course we will explore the increasingly important dynamic between textual information and visual information. In this course we will read about how hypertext has changed the environment and nature of the written word, and we will examine how the Web has "remediated" previous media into a new dynamic. We will use this knowledge to perform analyses of visual and textual artifacts; students may also create their own artifacts.
NMS 505
WORKSHOP/PORTFOLIO SEMINAR
Graduate
Students will have a choice between a collaborative workshop or a more individually-centered portfolio development seminar. Each group prepares a digital media project for an existing community group, such as a social service organization. Those students preferring to work independently will, under the guidance of the advising professor, develop and defend a complete portfolio of their work within the NMS program. May be repeated for elective credit.

NMS 506
INTERNSHIP
Graduate
In consultation with the director of NMS, students design a field experience under the direction of a project director in the field. The field experience may be derived from issues raised in courses, from thesis research, or from personal research interests.

NMS 507
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
In consultation with the director, advanced students may devise, with the approval of an NMS faculty member, an independent course of study that is related to the field yet does not duplicate a core or elective course already available.

NMS 508
DESIGN RHETORICS
Graduate
This course provides students with a theoretical foundation and practical skills in the design of rhetorically sophisticated new media objects. We will learn basic principles of visual composition, both by examining existing compositions and building our own. We will also seek to understand the way visual literacies and culture shape the rhetorical choices we make as designers and managers of new media projects.

NMS 509
SPECIAL TOPICS IN NEW MEDIA STUDIES
Graduate
See schedule for current offerings. May be repeated for credit as topics vary.

NMS 520
WEB DESIGN I
Graduate
An introduction to the process of making functional sites for display on the Internet. Students will learn HTML-based development software, and work with imaging software to apply fundamental theories of new media design to the production of working computer-screen applications.

NMS 521
WEB DESIGN II
Graduate
An introduction to digital authoring software, such as Macromedia Flash, that allows for the combination of animation, sound, and complex user interaction. Students will design and produce working animations while exploring the balance between purpose, usability, and aesthetic appeal.

NMS 530
HTML/CSS
Graduate
An introduction to fundamental web development and design languages. Students will learn HTML syntax, naming practices, and techniques for developing and structuring web pages and sites. Students will also learn how to style HTML pages with Cascading Style Sheets (CSS). While most instruction will proceed through XHTML, students will also have an opportunity to explore HTML5 and CSS3.
NMS 531
JAVASCRIPT
Graduate
An introduction to JavaScript and JavaScript libraries, focused on the rhetorical possibilities JavaScript makes available for web development. Students will learn the basics of JavaScript as a language, how it interacts with HTML and CSS, how to use it to produce dynamic and interactive structures in sites, and how to leverage existing JavaScript libraries.

NMS 540
DIGITAL ARCHIVES
Graduate
This course provides students with an overview of issues related to digital archives, and hands-on experience with contemporary archiving practices. Students in NMS 540 will explore digital archiving through theoretical readings and case studies, and create or maintain digital archives for local organizations.

NMS 580
MARKUP AND TEXT ENCODING IN THE HUMANITIES
Graduate
An introduction to the theory and practice of markup languages and text encoding in the context of humanities research. Practice in the basics of syntax and standards for XML, as well as for XML-schemas used for humanities projects, particularly the Text Encoding Initiative (TEI) guideline. Engagement with both theoretical discussions of encoding and ongoing case study projects to explore rhetorical and methodological choices researchers make as they develop projects that use encoded texts.

NMS 597
CANDIDACY CONTINUATION
Graduate
Masters candidates who are not enrolled in a course during a given quarter but who want to maintain active university status should register for this course by permission of the graduate director. This course does not maintain student status for purposes of student loans. Non-credit.

NMS 510
WRITING DIGITAL CONTENT
Graduate
This course teaches students how to author written and multimodal digital content. Students also learn how to strategically deploy digital content for professional and civic purposes through such practices as content strategy, content management, and measurement analytics.

NSG 200
HEALTH AND NUTRITION
Undergraduate
This course provides an introduction to the complex interactions between nutrition, exercise, genetics, cultural factors, physiological and psychological stressors and health. Each class provides an overview on the various nutritional factors which influence the health of individuals. A population based approach is used to address the issue of world hunger and undernutrition. Multiple perspectives relating to nutrition are included such as cultural, religious, family and alternative nutritional lifestyles.

NSG 210
PARENTING IN MULTICULTURAL FAMILY SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
Families exist in complex systems of home, community and environment. Each family depends on their cultural history, previous experiences and social supports to assist with parenting. Today over 70% of families with children have two working parents. In the case of single parenting or blended families stressors are great. This course will examine the effect of culture and family traditions on parenting practices in the United States. Multiple family theories will be introduced and discussed. The primary focus is identification of child and family risk factors and strengths. Identifying positive parenting behaviors will enhance the well being, self esteem and health of the family.
NSG 230
WOMEN'S HEALTH: THE PHYSICAL SELF
Undergraduate
This course explores the biological dimensions of women's health. The theoretical bases for evaluating medical research, assessing personal health, and decision-making consumerism from a feminist perspective are emphasized. An advanced-level scientific research paper due at the end of the quarter.

WRD 103 or HON 101 or HON 100 or ENG 120 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 232
MEN'S HEALTH: THE PHYSICAL SELF
Undergraduate
This introductory course explores the unitary nature of men's health patterns focusing on anatomy and physiology of the major body systems emphasizing the difference in males. Health issues pertinent to these system differences in males will be presented based upon health risks, assessment, screening, diagnosis, management and treatment. Developing an understanding of male anatomy and physiology utilizing correct medical terminology to describe various parts and conditions. Elements of scientific research are explored in the context of lecture and laboratory sessions. Students select a research-based topic supported by clinical research studies to articulate their knowledge and understanding through a written paper and oral power point presentation.

NSG 260
STATISTICS FOR THE HEALTH SCIENCES
Undergraduate
This course introduces the health science student to theory and application of probability, risk, descriptive and inferential statistics. Computer laboratory experience focuses on using data sets in clinical trials, epidemiology, and critical pathway development.

NSG 261
INTRODUCTION TO FINANCE/ACCOUNTING IN HEALTH CARE
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to basic principles, concepts, and techniques in cost accounting, reimbursement, budgeting, and financial management in health care for the practicing health professional.

NSG 301
INTRODUCTION TO THE ART AND SCIENCE OF NURSING I
Undergraduate
The foundations of the art and science of nursing are developed through the study and practice of basic nursing skills, therapeutic communication and critical thinking in classroom, laboratory and clinical settings. Foundations are strengthened through exposure to theories of human development, aging, stress, health teaching and health promotion. Knowledge is applied to the care of older adults in the clinical setting, facilitating student understanding of individual expressions of wellness, health and illness, and the development of a professional value system.

NSG 222 and NSG 332 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 302
INTRODUCTION TO THE ART & SCIENCE OF NURSING II
Undergraduate
DescriptionThe art and science of nursing and selected nursing theories are examined to provide the basis for clinical thinking, compassionate communication, and therapeutic nursing interventions in the provision of medical/surgical care with adult/geriatric populations. The roles of the nurse as a health facilitator and provider of care are emphasized in working with common clinical medical/surgical issues. Classroom, clinical and laboratory experiences are provided related to individuals and families experiencing acute and commonly occurring patterns of illness.

NSG 301, NSG 322 and NSG 332 are a prerequisite for this class.
NSG 303
INTRODUCTION TO THE ART & SCIENCE OF NURSING III
Undergraduate
The art and science of nursing and selected nursing theories are examined further as the basis for critical thinking, compassionate communication, and therapeutic nursing interventions in holistic nursing practice with adult/geriatric populations. The roles of the nurse as a health facilitator and provider of care are emphasized in working with more complex clinical issues. Classroom, clinical and laboratory experiences are provided related to health promotion and healing of individuals and families experiencing acute and commonly occurring patterns of illness.

NSG 302, NSG 322 and NSG 332 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 307
ART AND SCIENCE OF NURSING IV: PSYCHIATRIC MENTAL HEALTH
Undergraduate
This course examines the etiology, symptomatology, and clinical management of selected mental illnesses across the lifespan. The art and science of nursing and selected nursing and non-nursing theories are examined further as the basis for critical thinking, compassionate communication, and therapeutic nursing interventions in mental health nursing practice. The evidence base for psychiatric nursing will be examined and applied to practicum experiences. Various psychiatric nursing roles will be explored in the contexts of health promotion, disease management and rehabilitation.

NSG 303 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 322
BASIC PATHOPHYSIOLOGY AND PHARMACOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course is designed to integrate the principles of pathophysiology and pharmacology in order to set the knowledge base necessary to manage pharmacological therapy for both acutely and chronically ill patients. The nursing role in facilitating safe and effective pharmacotherapy is emphasized. The registered nurse plays a vital role in the education and treatment of patients undergoing drug therapy. To function successfully in this role, the nurse must understand the relationship between: a) pathophysiologic mechanisms and manifestations of disease, b) the fundamental principles of drug action, c) the application of specific drugs in the treatment of disease, and d) related nursing care considerations. The course recognizes the importance of patient teaching as a nursing function and provides greater emphasis on this topic. Guidelines for and specific examples of patient teaching are covered in each session. Changes in structure and function as a result of normal development and aging are addressed. Fundamentals of drug administration and calculations related to pharmacotherapy in a way that ensures the patient’s safety and satisfies medical and legal concerns are being reviewed.

NSG 330
FOUNDATIONS OF PROFESSIONAL NURSING PRACTICE
Undergraduate
This course introduces the registered nurse student to the philosophy and mission of the DePaul Department of Nursing University Program. The central focus will be on the evaluation and analysis of the associate degree nurse transition to educator and leadership management roles at the advanced degree level. Major areas of emphasis will include the evolution of nursing as a scientific professional discipline, the role of the professional nurse as a client advocate, change agent as an educator and leader, the role of power and politics as sources of empowerment, legal and ethical parameters in the scope of nursing practice.

NSG 332
PHYSICAL AND PSYCHOSOCIAL ASSESSMENT STRATEGIES
Undergraduate
This course is designed to prepare the student to perform comprehensive physical assessments and mental status exams of the individual in the context of their family and community.

NSG 322 is a corequisite for this class.

NSG 335
LESBIAN HEALTH MATTERS
Undergraduate
This course explores the unitary processes and experiences of health and quality of life for lesbians in diverse communities and with a range of identification and orientation. The idea that homophobia exists and serves as a significant barrier to access and to maintenance of health for lesbians underpins the course. The course uses multiple forms of scientific literature, general literature, film, and art to study the personal, ecological, and socially constructed determinants of health and quality of life. Various feminist, nursing, queer, and post-colonial perspectives on contemporary scientific and social discourse will emphasize linking health and illness with economic, social/cultural, and political dimensions of society. Concepts of personal health patterning, risk reduction, and health promotion will be stressed.
NSG 376
COMMUNITY HEALTH NURSING FOR THE PROFESSIONAL NURSE
Undergraduate
The emphasis of this course is on the delivery of comprehensive, culturally appropriate services to meet the continuing health needs of families, aggregates, and communities. Students will design population-focused nursing interventions to reduce assessed risk, incidence, and prevalence of community health problems. The role of the community health nurse in health promotion, disease, and injury prevention and management across the lifespan is examined, specifically across the continuum of care and coordination of services at the individual and population levels. Emphasis is placed on current trends and professional, legal/ethical, economic, cultural, and environmental issues as they apply to community health nursing.

NSG 377
PRACTICUM: THE PROFESSIONAL NURSE AND COMMUNITY HEALTH
Undergraduate
This course is taken following NSG 376 and provides the clinical experiences for development of the professional nursing role in community health. Learning activities focus on population-based approaches to community assessment; health program planning, evaluation, and policy development; and the management of change within the family and the community. Leadership development is emphasized in both public health and community based settings involved in the health care delivery to individuals, families, and communities. Students will demonstrate an advanced baccalaureate level of planning, implementing, and evaluating evidence-based care within multicultural contexts.

NSG 380
UNDERGRADUATE NURSING SYNTHESIS
Undergraduate
This course provides a capstone experience of professional nursing practice in contemporary society through integration of liberal arts knowledge, skills, and attitudes developed in earlier courses with evidence-based practice. Students will collaborate with the instructor and each other to contribute to course topics, readings, and discussion. Course work will include research, writing assignments, and other assessments of the student’s understanding of and preparation to practice ethical, compassionate, and culturally competent person- and family-centered care which is informed by evidence from current nursing research. Students will complete a group project demonstrating integration of liberal arts and sciences education with professional nursing practice in contemporary society. Activism and nursing’s role in health care reform, and the need for ongoing personal reflection and professional development will also be explored.

NSG 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate INDEPENDENT STUDY Variable credit.

NSG 400
THEORETICAL COMPONENTS OF NURSING
Graduate
This seminar course is designed to examine the nature, function, and development of concepts, models and theories for their relevance to advanced nursing practice and nursing research. The structure of theory is analyzed by examining the relationship between theoretical components. A variety of types of theoretical statements utilized to conceptualize nursing practice and research are presented and evaluated. A process for developing a conceptual framework for inquiry and data-based nursing practice is presented.

NSG 431 or status as a Advanced Practice or DNP student is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 401
NURSING RESEARCH I
Graduate
This is a seminar course emphasizing the components of the research process. Using discussions and analysis of published studies, students will examine current research problems and their associated methodological and ethical issues. Students will prepare problem statements, formulate research questions, review nursing research literature, and utilize appropriate methodologies in preparing a research proposal. MENP students are required to take NSG 481 as a co-requisite.
A synthesis of organic & inorganic chemistry, molecular biology, and cellular physiology that serves as a foundation for advanced understanding of pathophysiology and pharmacology.

Status as an NP student or (status as an MENP student and NSG 332) is a prerequisite for this class.

Survey of current advances on human physiology with emphasis on the cellular and microcellular basis of health and disease. Students will engage in intensive study of human anatomy and physiology and complex pathophysiologic processes. Current research findings are reviewed for implications for health promotion, health maintenance and health restoration.

Fiscal management and budgetary practices in health care institutions are explored. Budget preparation, cost-benefit analysis, product costing, reimbursement, and analysis of financial status in organizations is emphasized.

This course builds on the principles of pathophysiology and pharmacology introduced in NSG 322. Emphasis is placed on the proper use of medication in self-care and dependent-care relative to health-related requisites, nursing role in administration of drugs, and proper patient education. The course focuses on the principles of nursing management in drug therapy along with the basics of core drug knowledge and patient-related variables. The major classifications of drugs are being examined along with issues arising from the use of drug therapy in contemporary society, and the related nursing implications are discussed. The pharmacological aspects of nursing care are integrated using the nursing process. In addition, there is emphasis on assessing and evaluating patient responses that change in accord with health, age, lifestyle, gender and other factors.

NSG 322 is a prerequisite for this class.

Using a case study approach, pathophysiologic and physiologic alterations will be analyzed in selected systems-related disease processes. Appropriate clinical and lab analysis will be included in preparation for advance practice. Using a variety of learning modalities, students will explore current theories and research related to pathology, pathophysiology and abnormal physiologic function including implications for health promotion, maintenance and restoration.

NSG 422 is a prerequisite for this class.

This course builds on the background of the registered nurse in exploring advanced concepts of pathophysiology and pharmacology. Emphasis is placed on concepts of pathophysiology in relationship to pharmacologic therapies and clinical management. The application of pharmacologic therapies in health promotion and patient management is explored from perspective of the masters prepared nurse.

Seminars will discuss social, economic, legislative and regulatory mechanisms that influence professional practice and health policy in the United States. Emphasis is on the legal definition of professional practice as well as major issues involved in designing, implementing and evaluating policy decisions including scope, dynamics, and conceptual and practical dilemmas.
NSG 431
HEALTH PROMOTION FOR FAMILIES AND COMMUNITIES
Graduate
Examines issues, frameworks, theories and techniques relevant to health promotion for individuals, families and communities. Health disparities and social & cultural factors impacting health and wellness are examined and methods for assessing and facilitating cultural competence of providers and institutions are studied. The nurse's role as advocate for health promotion in public policy is discussed.

NSG 433
NURSING AND BIOMEDICAL ETHICS IN HEALTH CARE
Graduate
Seminars and case studies are used to explore issues and frameworks for ethical practice and research in the health professions.

NSG 440
MATERNAL HEALTH NURSING
Graduate
The art of childbearing nursing: a didactic and clinical course as presented and discussed in class and implemented in the clinical setting. Focus is on the role of the nurse in caring for healthy newborns, and childbearing women who may be experiencing actual or potential educational needs, illness manifestations, or injury patterns. A variety of clinical settings, both inpatient and outpatient for maternity care will be utilized.

NSG 441
INFANT, CHILD AND ADOLESCENT NURSING
Graduate
The art of pediatric nursing: a didactic and clinical course as presented and discussed in class and implemented in the clinical setting. Focus is on the role of the nurse in caring for healthy newborns, children ranging from newborns through adolescents. Levels of prevention, health promotion, health maintenance and health restoration will be discussed. Emphasis is placed on the physical, psychosocial, and developmental needs of infants, children and adolescents within the family as well as the alterations that occur during hospitalization. Major causes of morbidity and mortality will also be covered. The influence of health policy, cultural, economic, and ethical issues on the child and family are also addressed.

NSG 442
COMMUNITY HEALTH NURSING
Graduate
The emphasis of this course is to provide a theoretical basis for nursing and public health sciences in the field of population health. Emphasis is placed on application of the principles of primary health care, strategies of health promotion, disease prevention and management across the life-span in home and community settings, and nursing practice of community-based families and population. Current trends and professional, legal/ethical, economic, cultural, and environmental issues are examined as they apply to community health nursing.

NSG 443
CLINICAL IMMERSION AND INTERNSHIP
Graduate
This is the capstone clinical course in which students, preceptors, and faculty collaborate in application and synthesis of the core concepts of caring, collaboration, communication, cultural sensitivity, community and environment as they relate to the nursing care of clients with complex health care problems throughout the life span. The students will also demonstrate competency in clinical skills, critical thinking, problem solving, and time management. The purpose of the synthesis course is to facilitate the integration of current and prior curricular content so that the student can become an active and productive member of the health care team.

NSG 442 and NSG 472 are a prerequisite for this class.
NSG 445
NURSING PROFESSIONALISM, ADVOCACY, AND LEADERSHIP
Graduate
This course discusses the concepts essential to the development of the professional identity and role of the nurse as a leader. Unique leadership contributions of professional nursing to healthcare in multiple settings will be discussed. The nurse’s interactions with nursing colleagues and other health care providers will be addressed with an emphasis on leadership, communication, delegation, conflict resolution, negotiation and team building. The course draws on current knowledge and theory of leadership and the profession of nursing. The course will focus on the role of the professional nurse in relation to lawful, ethical practice and in relation to current health care system needs and expectations. Nursing roles and specialty practices will be discussed with regard to the leadership provided by these nurse experts. The course will also emphasize the development of the collaborative skills and understanding necessary to lead within the complex healthcare system, including the ability to present her/himself as a professional with evidence of leadership abilities. NSG 442 and NSG 472 are a co-requisite for this class.

NSG 448
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
This course is reserved for individuals who wish to do focused study at the graduate level.

NSG 450
SELECTED TOPICS IN NURSING
Graduate
This course is reserved for special seminars organized from time to time to accommodate the needs of groups interested in specific topics.

NSG 451
INTRODUCTION TO NURSING ADMINISTRATION AND LEADERSHIP
Graduate
This course is an introduction to the nursing leadership concentration as well as an overview of current issues and theory of nursing administration for all advanced practice nurses. As an introduction to the nursing leadership concentration, this course places emphasis on developing master's level skills of critical reading, scholarly writing, analytical discussion, and shared leadership. May also be taken as a health sciences management elective. The expected outcome of the course is a nursing research question and literature review that will form the basis of the students work in their concentration and the final research project.

NSG 452
ORGANIZATIONAL AND FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT IN HEALTH CARE
Graduate
This course provides insight and reflection on the executive role in advanced practice and organizational administration. Concepts, models, and techniques used to manage systems in a variety of health care organizations or practices are analyzed. Organizational assessment, resource development, and product costing are emphasized. This course provides insight and reflection on the executive role in advanced practice and organizational administration. Concepts, models, and techniques used to manage systems in a variety of health care organizations or practices are analyzed. Organizational assessment, resource development, and product costing are emphasized.

NSG 453
CASE MANAGEMENT AND THE MANAGED CARE ENVIRONMENT
Graduate
In this course, students engage in analysis of concepts central to an indepth understanding of the managed care environment and case management as a clinical care system. Emphasis is upon development of skill in organizational and population-based assessment and data analysis, clinical pathway development, and interdisciplinary collaboration. Students develop a data-base for a clinical project focusing on a client population from their work environment.

NSG 454
INNOVATIONS IN HEALTH CARE DELIVERY
Graduate
This course provides the instruction and clinical experience for the development of the advanced practice nurse role as case manager and administrator. Learning activities focus on implementing contemporary data-based nursing practice models in a variety of health care settings, and the diffusion of innovation at the individual, family and organizational levels.
NSG 455
CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT FOR HEALTH CARE SYSTEMS
Graduate
Theories, principles and approaches to curriculum development are explored. Basic elements of curricular design are examined in relation to traditional and evolving paradigms, reflecting development in social and professional dimensions of health care.

NSG 456
PRACTICUM IN NURSING ADMINISTRATION I
Graduate
Practicum In Nursing Administration I
NSG 451 and NSG 452 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 457
PRACTICUM IN NURSING ADMINISTRATION II
Graduate
Practicum In Nursing Administration II
NSG 456 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 458
TEACHING IN HEALTH CARE SYSTEMS
Graduate
This course prepares the registered nurse to apply theories, principles and strategies in education. Emphasis is on education as a vehicle for enhancing the health of populations and systems from an ecological perspective.

NSG 459
PRACTICUM IN TEACHING IN HEALTH CARE SYSTEMS
Graduate
Practicum In Teaching In Health Care Systems
NSG 455 and NSG 458 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 460
ADVANCED PHYSICAL ASSESSMENT ACROSS THE LIFESPAN
Graduate
This course emphasizes the knowledge and skills necessary for advanced health assessment of individuals and families across the lifespan. This knowledge will be incorporated with related pathophysiological processes in common health abnormalities, with integration of laboratory findings and physical exam findings. The course will focus on physical, psychosocial, sociocultural, environmental, and developmental elements of advanced assessment necessary for developing clinical data-gathering skills, diagnostic reasoning and clinical problem-solving. It will allow students to explore fully the human individual, holistically, without recourse to invasive technologies. Interviewing techniques and head-to-toe physical assessment will be reviewed. The course will then concentrate on the focused systems assessment necessary for providing care to clients across the lifespan and assist the students in differentiating between normal, deviations from normal, and abnormal physical assessment findings. At the end of the course, students will be expected to perform an advanced physical exam upon a designated client and effectively communicate the findings.
NSG 302 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 462
ADVANCED WOMEN'S HEALTH ASSESSMENT
Graduate
Lectures focus on the synthesis of scientific knowledge in performing integrated, comprehensive assessments of women from late adolescence through maturity. Emphasis is placed on the woman in the context of the family and community in health and illness. Laboratory practice includes taking the health history and performing the physical examination to evaluate primary and reproductive health care needs.
NSG 422, NSG 424 and NSG 464 are a prerequisite for this class.
NSG 464
HEALTH ASSESSMENT FOR ADVANCED PRACTICE
Graduate
This course builds on the skills acquired in health assessment and will introduce the skills and knowledge needed to perform a history and physical examination on patients of all ages. Lecture will focus on the synthesis of scientific knowledge in performing integrated, comprehensive assessments of individuals from infancy through maturity. Emphasis is placed on the child in the context of the family and community. Laboratory practice includes taking the health history and performing the physical examination to evaluate primary health care needs. Adult Nurse Practitioner students will not participate in the assessment of the infant and child, but instead will participate in more in-depth assessment of the older adult. NSG 422 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 472
CRITICAL CARE NURSING
Graduate
This is a theory and clinical course with a focus on the roles and responsibilities of nurses caring for adults who are experiencing acute illness that may result in complex multiple system disorders. This course will emphasize the critical care concepts of oxygenation, perfusion, ischemia, pain, metabolism, and quality of life. In this course, students will synthesize knowledge and apply advanced skills to manage high acuity and critical care clients. An emphasis is placed on providing a strong theoretical foundation for the student to be able to apply critical thinking skills to clinical decision-making. In the clinical area utilizing the critical thinking techniques of the nursing process, students will assess, collect data, plan, implement and evaluate the care of clients hospitalized in high acuity and critical care units. NSG 440 and NSG 441 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 473
PRIMARY CARE OF THE INFANT, CHILD, AND THE ADOLESCENT
Graduate
This course is designed to explore health promotion, health protection, and disease prevention dimensions in pediatric primary care. The focus is on common issues related to clinical, developmental and behavioral needs of children and adolescents and their families. The dynamics of the pediatric client and nurse practitioner relationship will be analyzed, focusing on life transitions and the impact of health and illness on infants, children, adolescents and their families. Clinical practice guidelines will be evaluated through epidemiological and research evidence of selected developmental and behavioral disorders, as well as acute and chronic health problems. Selected theory-based models relevant to primary care of children will be critiqued. NSG 464 and NSG 484 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 474
PRIMARY CARE OF THE ADULT AND OLDER ADULT
Graduate
Lectures focus on synthesis and application of scientific knowledge for family advanced practice nursing in primary care. The emphasis of course content is on building advanced knowledge of chronic and complex health problems in the primary care management of adults. This course examines primary health care needs of adults across the life span, with a focus on health promotion and disease prevention. The integrated role of the advanced practice nurse in providing holistic care and collaborative practice is emphasized. NSG 464 and NSG 484 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 475
CLINICAL MANAGEMENT OF PREGNANCY AND CHILDBIRTH
Graduate
This advanced practice course provides a comprehensive review of both complicated and high-risk obstetrical conditions. Course content builds upon the nurse practitioner student's knowledge of primary care for low-risk obstetrical patients. Clinical practice guidelines for the advanced practice nurse in a woman's health specialty practice or in a practice devoted largely to the care of women in the family is emphasized. NSG 464 and NSG 484 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 477
CLINICAL MANAGEMENT OF WOMEN'S HEALTH AND ILLNESS
Graduate
Lectures focus on synthesis and application of scientific knowledge for gynecologic advanced practice nursing. The integrated role of the advanced practice nurse in providing holistic care and collaborative practice is emphasized.
NSG 478
CLINICAL MANAGEMENT OF ACUTE AND CHRONIC ILLNESSES IN PRIMARY CARE
Graduate
Lectures focus on synthesis and application of scientific knowledge for adult advanced practice nursing. The integrated role of the advanced practice nurse in providing holistic care and collaborative practice is emphasized. The dynamics of the adult client and nurse practitioner relationship will be analyzed, focusing on life transitions and the impact of health and illness on adults, families, and communities. Clinical practice guidelines will be evaluated through epidemiological and research evidenced of selected acute, emergent and chronic health problems.

NSG 464 and NSG 484 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 479
ADVANCED GERONTOLOGICAL NURSING
Graduate
This course examines the biological changes of aging using a system approach and reviews selected clinical issues and health problems of older adults, particularly the common health conditions associated with geriatric syndrome. This course provides a foundation in advanced gerontological nursing theory and practice. Comprehensive geriatric assessment, changes in normal aging, geriatric syndromes and functional status of older adults will be explored. Students are expected to learn and apply evidence-based practice to promote wellness, maximize function, and enhance self-care of older adults.

NSG 481
BIOSTATISTICS AND EPIDEMIOLOGY
Graduate
The application of biostatistics/epidemiology to clinical practice and research is the intent of this seminar. Initial discussions will focus on understanding biostatistics and epidemiological statistics as applied to health and disease in diverse populations. From considering the relationship between measurement and biostatics to understanding the importance of insuring data integrity throughout the research process, students will examine existing data sets (federal, voluntary agencies, professional/specialty organizations). Then the focus will be on understanding epidemiological statistics (rates, proportions, relative and absolute risk), descriptive statistics, measures of differences, measures of relationships/prediction, and multivariate statistical models as applied to health and disease.

NSG 482
INTRODUCTION TO EPIDEMIOLOGY
Graduate
An investigative problem-solving process is used to study the personal and ecological determinants of health and disease frequencies in diverse populations. Data are manipulated to plan, implement and evaluate health promotion and disease control programs for a variety of health care settings. Infectious and chronic disease prevention are emphasized. Students electing to take the course for four credit hours will complete a project using the epidemiologic method.

NSG 483
PRACTICUM IN POPULATION-BASED NURSING PRACTICE 1
Graduate
This is the first practicum in a sequence of supervised clinical experiences for nurse practitioner students. The focus of NSG 483 is on application of health assessment and examination skills in the clinical setting, identification of health risks, and learning how to manage common illnesses. Analysis and application of current research is used as the basis for decision-making in performing the health history and physical assessment, contributing to interdisciplinary treatment planning, and teaching for health promotion and illness prevention.

NSG 484
PHARMACOLOGY FOR ADVANCED PRACTICE
Graduate
Provides the advanced-practice nurse with the knowledge base necessary to manage pharmacological therapy for acute and chronically ill clients collaboratively with other members of the health care team. Direct and indirect responsibility for clinical decision-making regarding the administration, management and evaluation of drugs are emphasized.

NSG 428 is a prerequisite for this class.
NSG 487
PRACTICUM IN POPULATION-BASED NURSING PRACTICE II
Graduate
This is the second practicum in a sequence of supervised clinical experiences for nurse practitioner students in which students demonstrate increasing comprehensive practice of primary care in the context of specialty practice for selected populations. Nurse practitioner student readings, assignments, and clinical experiences in primary care: family, adult, pediatric, or women's health with an emphasis on health promotion and disease prevention.

NSG 483 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 488
PROFESSIONAL ISSUES & RESEARCH IN POPULATION-BASED ADVANCED PRACTICE NURSING
Graduate
This course introduces the graduate nursing students to a variety of advanced practice nursing roles and the competencies needed for successful practice in those roles. The students explore the conceptual, theoretical, and empirical bases of population based advanced practice nursing. Critical thinking skills are developed through the student's debate of current local, state, and national laws and analysis of coding case studies. Communication skills are fostered through the use of class discussions and development of various assignments. Scholarly written and verbal presentations enhance the student's understanding of historical, economical, political, legal, and ethical perspectives of advanced practice nursing.

NSG 490
PRACTICUM IN POPULATION-BASED NURSING PRACTICE III
Graduate
This is the third clinical practicum in a sequence of supervised clinical experiences for nurse practitioner students in which students demonstrate increasing comprehensive practice of primary care in the context of specialty practice for selected populations. This course provides the opportunity to integrate the multiple professional roles of the advanced practice nurse while refining their skills in the comprehensive practice of primary care and/or specialty practice for selected populations. Emphasis is on health promotion and disease prevention with unitary human beings in mutual process with their environment in the management of health and illness, teaching and health counseling and organizational and role competencies. Students select sites and preceptors in family, adult, pediatric or women's health promotion according to their area of concentration and self-assessed strengths and weaknesses.

NSG 487 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 500
CHEMISTRY AND PHYSICS OF ANESTHESIA
Graduate
Review of principles of physics with emphasis on their application in the clinical practice of anesthesia. Nurse anesthesia residents (NAR) will engage in a comprehensive analysis of cell physiology and biochemistry with emphasis upon metabolism, enzyme function, and protein synthesis. Current research findings and their anesthetic implications will be discussed.

NSG 501
ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY I
Graduate
An intensive 6 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of advanced anatomy and physiology of the gastrointestinal, nervous and endocrine systems. The course is divided into three sections with emphasis placed on the structural and functional role of each system in maintaining homeostasis. Clinical implications of current research findings will be stressed.

NSG 502
ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY II
Graduate
An intensive 6 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of advanced anatomy and physiology of the cardiovascular, respiratory and renal systems. The course is divided into sections with emphasis placed on the structural and functional role of each system in maintaining homeostasis. Clinical implications of current research findings will be stressed.
NSG 503
PATHOPHYSIOLOGY
Graduate
An intensive 6 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of diseases and disorders of the nervous, endocrine, cardiovascular, respiratory, renal, GI/hepatic, and musculoskeletal systems. Implications for the design and implementation of an appropriate anesthesia care plan for individuals with specific system disease/disorders will be discussed in detail. Emphasis will be placed on system-specific diagnostic and therapeutic procedures that require anesthesia services.

NSG 504
PRINCIPLES OF ANESTHESIA PRACTICE I
Graduate
Designed to introduce the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. Emphasis is placed upon pre-operative patient assessment, anesthesia equipment and technology, airway management, intra-operative management, and postoperative care of patients undergoing general and regional anesthesia. Course includes orientation to clinical practice.

NSG 505
PRINCIPLES OF ANESTHESIA PRACTICE II
Graduate
An intensive 4 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of special populations, including pediatric, obstetric, geriatric and trauma patients, as well as patients requiring pain management. Emphasis will be placed on the anatomical and physiological differences that characterize each population with a focus on the pathological disorders unique to each group. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be stressed.

NSG 506
PRINCIPLES OF ANESTHESIA PRACTICE III
Graduate
An in-depth course that places emphasis on perioperative anesthetic management of patients presenting for specialty surgical procedures or requiring management for chronic pain. Implications for the development, implementation, and evaluation of anesthesia care plans will be stressed. The ethical, legal and professional issues that influence the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia will be discussed. Course includes preparation for the Certification Examination for Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists.

NSG 507
ANESTHETIC PHARMACOLOGY
Graduate
This course is an in depth introduction to anesthetic pharmacology. It covers the pharmacokinetics, pharmacodynamics, and pharmacotherapeutics of drugs used in the administration of general, local, and regional anesthesia and provides the scientific basis for the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia.

NSG 508
ADJUNCTIVE ANESTHETIC
Graduate
This 4 quarter hour hybrid course (in class and on-line sections) includes the pharmacokinetics, pharmacodynamics, and pharmacotherapeutics of drugs used in the treatment of a variety of disease states. Implications of current therapy with these agents and use of selected agents as adjunctive therapy in the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia will be stressed.

NSG 509
ADVANCED PHYSICAL ASSESSMENT FOR NURSE ANESTHETISTS
Graduate
This course will provide strategies that promote effective history-taking along with cognitive and psychomotor skills needed for the advanced physical assessment of the neurological, musculoskeletal, respiratory, cardiac, circulatory, and gastrointestinal systems across the lifespan. The assessment of body systems includes an overview of anatomy and physiology, techniques necessary to perform inspection, palpation, percussion and auscultation; and interpretation of physical findings and laboratory testing relevant to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia.
NSG 510
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM I
Graduate
An introduction to the clinical practice of anesthesia with emphasis on the principles introduced in ANES 500-504, 507 and 508. Includes administration of anesthesia for select patient populations under direct instruction and supervision of a certified registered nurse anesthetist (CRNA) or anesthesiologist.

NSG 511
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM II
Graduate
Expanded application and integration of basic principles applicable to ANES 510.
NSG 510 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 512
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM III
Graduate
This practicum provides the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with an opportunity to apply and integrate the basic principles of nurse anesthesia practice. Emphasis is on the anesthetic comprehensive management of the adult patient presenting for elective and emergency surgery.
NSG 511 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 513
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM IV
Graduate
The first of four advanced anesthesia practicums that allow the third year nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) the opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate anesthesia care plans for all patient populations undergoing a wide variety of specialty surgical and therapeutic procedures. It is designed to broaden the knowledge and skill base of the NAR. Includes seminar presentations on selected topics or issues relative to the advanced practice of anesthesia and completion of online bimonthly review quizzes.
NSG 512 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 514
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM V
Graduate
The second in a series of advanced practicums that provide the third year nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with the opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate an anesthesia care plan for all patient populations undergoing a wide variety of surgical and therapeutic procedures. Emphasis is placed on application, integration, and synthesis of knowledge, skills, and attitudes that are representative of the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. Includes seminar presentations on selected topics and issues relative to the advanced practice of anesthesia and completion of online bimonthly review quizzes.
NSG 513 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 515
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM VI
Graduate
The third in a series of advanced practicums that provides the third year nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with the opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate an anesthesia care plan for all patient populations undergoing a wide variety of surgical and therapeutic procedures. Emphasis is placed on application, integration, and synthesis of the knowledge, skills, and attitudes representative of the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. Includes seminar presentations on selected topics or issues relative to the advanced practice of anesthesia and completion of online bimonthly review quizzes.
NSG 514 is a prerequisite for this class.
NSG 516
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM VII
Graduate
The final advanced practicum in which the third year nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) demonstrates the knowledge, skills, and attitudes necessary for entry level nurse anesthesia practice: proficiency in providing perioperative nurse anesthesia care for all patient populations; an ethical and culturally sensitive approach to patient care; analysis and synthesis of current research for application into practice; ability to perform a comprehensive self evaluation; and display of a professional attitude toward life long learning. Includes seminar presentations on selected topics or issues relative to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia.

NSG 515 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 521
INNOVATIONS IN HEALTH CARE DELIVERY
Graduate
This course provides the laboratory and clinical experiences for the development of the professional nurse role as case manager and administrator. Learning activities focus on implementing contemporary data-based nursing practice models in a variety of health care settings, and the diffusion of innovation at the individual, family and organizational levels.

NSG 522
FINANCE AND COSTING IN HEALTH CARE
Graduate
This course provides learning experiences that focus on fiscal management and budgetary practices in health care institutions. Budget preparation, cost-benefit analysis, product costing, reimbursement, and analysis of financial status in organizations are emphasized. Health care finance is covered involving the major sources and uses of funds. Health care accounting is included which addresses financial reporting and cost measurement. An understanding of finance, accounting, policy and administration enables the advanced practice nurse to enhance the delivery of health care in a dynamic health care environment.

NSG 540
CULTURE, ETHICS, AND POLICY ANALYSIS
Graduate
This seminar is designed to explore cultural and ethical perspectives and their relationships to health policy. Health disparities based on social and cultural difference are linked to major diseases such as heart disease, cancer, diabetes, hypertension and stroke, as well as access to and outcomes of health services. Class discussions will focus on the past, current and future health policy needs of multicultural and multifaceted societies. The phenomena of cultural, ethnic, gender, class, and sexual variation in complex societies; notions of diversity and social justice; understandings of cultural conflicts and how cultural differences are managed in healthcare settings will be considered. Students will integrate concepts of all levels of prevention in health care, examine research in health ethics and health policy and discuss legislative processes for their potential to improve the health of the public.

NSG 550
HEALTHCARE ECONOMICS
Graduate
This course focuses on application of supply and demand theory to the healthcare industry as well as analysis of financing and healthcare delivery in the United States and other countries. The principles and tools of microeconomics and macroeconomics will be applied to the healthcare market. Applications particularly pertinent in economic climates include the supply and demand of healthcare, practice incentives, managed care, malpractice and pharmaceutical economics.

NSG 551
LEADERSHIP AND ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAVIOR
Graduate
The course focuses on critical leadership characteristics that are necessary for transforming organizational behavior in healthcare organizations. Students will analyze leadership theories/styles and the interrelationship between leadership and management. Strategies for directing and managing successful change based upon an organization's vision and mission will be explored. Students will have an opportunity to assess their personal leadership style and to develop effective strategic leadership skills.
NSG 552
PROGRAM EVALUATION
Graduate
This course will familiarize the student in different types of program evaluation, including objectives oriented evaluation, management oriented evaluation, consumer oriented evaluation, expertise oriented evaluation adversary oriented evaluation, participant oriented evaluation and alternative evaluation approaches. Students gain practical experience through a series of exercises involving the design of a conceptual framework, development of indicators, analysis of computerized service statistics, and development of an evaluation plan to measure impact.

NSG 548, NSG 554 and NSG 600 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 554
INFORMATICS AND TECHNOLOGY APPLICATIONS
Graduate
This course focuses on information systems technology and its application for the improvement and transformation of patient-centered health care. Implications of informatics for advanced practice nursing and health care in general are explored. Impacts on consumer-provider relationships, ethical and legal issues, global/future informatics issues and electronic health record issues are being examined. The course prepares the student to become proficient at selecting and using technology for organizing, analyzing, managing, and evaluating information in nursing administration, education, and clinical practice settings. The use of technology as an adjunct to doctoral-level inquiry and how it supports clinical and professional decision-making is explained and demonstrated.

NSG 555
PHARMACOTHERAPEUTIC IMPLICATIONS FOR THE OLDER ADULT
Graduate
This course examines various factors that impact the pharmacokinetics and pharmacodynamics of drugs used in the care of the older adult. The primary focus will be on drug therapy in the older person, ensuring the appropriate use of frequently prescribed medications. Economic and policy issues regarding pharmacotherapy of the older adult will be explored. Students are expected to develop nursing assessments skills and plan nursing interventions that can promote the appropriate use of medications in this complex older adult patient population.

NSG 561
EVIDENCE BASED MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course provides an introduction to the utilization of best evidence in managing healthcare issues. The curriculum is intended to prepare the student to identify management problems and develop a related path of focused inquiry, evaluate reliable databases and searching strategies to find evidence, and base management decisions on the best evidence available.

NSG 564
ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAVIOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES
Graduate
This course in Organizational Behavior (OB), and Human Resources (HR), is designed to introduce organizational behavior theory; organizational communication, and human resource management principles to effectively lead and manage an organization. The OB Students will apply management and leadership techniques garnered from successful healthcare organizations to understand and practice management functions, including: understanding employee behavior and motivation, assessing performance, employing groups and teams, operationalize communication, evaluating conflict, and making appropriate business decisions. The HR functions of planning, recruiting, selecting, training, and appraising will be emphasized. Realistic case studies, collaborative discussions, practical research and peer reviews will be used to develop students' skills in organizational behavior and human resource management.

NSG 565
STRATEGIC PLANNING AND LEADERSHIP IN HEALTHCARE
Graduate
This course is intended to introduce the student to leadership skills and strategic planning in healthcare organizations. Creative, collaborative problem solving within the context of current strategic issues in healthcare will be explored. The course content provides an overview of the strategic planning process including the elements required to successfully develop and implement short and long-term plans. The course focuses on leadership skills and qualities necessary to succeed and thrive in the healthcare industry as well as assist the students in applying theories of leadership, motivation, communication and conflict management. Students will learn the construction of a strategic plan and analyze the state of strategic planning in the healthcare industry. Additionally, students will have the opportunity to analyze their own leadership skills and create an action plan for leadership development.
TOPICS IN HEALTHCARE ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
NSG 570
LEARNING THEORIES
Graduate
Students will examine domains of learning and adult learning theories and how they apply to health professions students. Topics include best practices for motivation, adapting to various learning styles, teaching models/strategies, instructional paradigms, and interprofessional learning environments. The concept of lifelong learning is introduced and students will explore the role that higher education and corporate education/training play in instilling a desire for lifelong learning. In addition, students will develop statements of Teaching Philosophy and Philosophy on Interprofessional Education.

NSG 574
CLASSROOM ASSESSMENT
Graduate
Students will examine various tools to assess student learning in the classroom setting. Topics include annotated portfolios, concept maps, memory matrix, process analysis, rubrics development, and the use of reflective statements. Students will also discuss how to adapt assessment tools to include interprofessional students.

NSG 575
COURSE DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Students will apply curriculum design techniques to develop a course in a health-related area of their own choosing. Activities will include writing learning objectives, planning and organizing content, selecting instructional methods and materials, and designing assessment tools. Students will also discuss how to adapt courses to include interprofessional students.

NSG 579
EVALUATING CLINICAL COMPETENCE
Graduate
Student will develop appropriate tools to evaluate student performance in a clinical setting. In addition, students will develop a clinical rotation manual in their area of interest

NSG 590
INDEPENDENT STUDY IN NURSING
Graduate
The student will work with a faculty mentor to develop an individualized plan of work involving in depth study in an area related to nursing and healthcare. This can include, but is not limited to, reviewing literature for evidence of best practices, developing a research project, collecting data on an ongoing project, coding or analyzing data, developing a research presentation, or working in the community on research or evidence-based intervention projects.

NSG 596
CAPSTONE IN NURSING ADMINISTRATION
Graduate
This course provides a reflective synthesis of the coursework for Health Administration with an emphasis on the American Organization of Nurse Executive competencies. This final Practicum will include a formal synthesis paper and oral presentation that documents achievement of the MS degree outcomes and the competencies in the selected area of specialization. The paper will provide evidence of students' achievement of the program outcomes and the competencies required to become a nurse administrator and to sit for the certification exam in Executive Nursing Practice. Critical concepts covered will include communication, relationship-building, healthcare environment, leadership, professionalism, and business skills. Requires 200 hours of practicum plus online lecture/seminar.

NSG 597
CAPSTONE IN NURSING EDUCATION
Graduate
This course provides a reflective synthesis of the coursework for Nursing Education. This final Practicum will include a formal synthesis paper and oral presentation that documents achievement of the MS degree outcomes and the competencies in the selected area of specialization. The paper will provide evidence of students' achievement of the program outcomes and the competencies required to sit for the Certified Nurse Education Examination (CNE) and become a nursing educator. Critical concepts covered will include effective teaching strategies, evaluation, measurement, and educational processes, and psychometric testing for academic outcomes. Current pedagogical, ethical, social and legal aspects of nursing education will be included. Requires 200 hours of practicum plus online lecture/seminar.
NSG 598
GRADUATE RESEARCH SYNTHESIS
Graduate
Students conduct supervised research terminating in a manuscript suitable for publication. The study must be approved by the faculty advisor and the School of Nursing Human Subjects Committee prior to registration. Students are encouraged to generate research questions from their clinical area of study courses.

NSG 401 and NSG 481 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 599
THESIS RESEARCH
Graduate
Students conduct supervised original research terminating in a completed and bound thesis. The study must be approved by the faculty advisor and the thesis committee approved by the School of Nursing prior to registration and must be completed during the term.

NSG 401 and NSG 481 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 600
EVIDENCE-BASED PRACTICE RESEARCH
Graduate
This course will focus on the evidence based practice process, theories, concepts, and methods. This will include the synthesis and application of scientific evidence to nursing and healthcare practice within a systems framework. Students will develop a proposal for an evidence-based, scholarly leadership proposal, which will translate science into practice. In order to accomplish this, the student will focus on a specific aggregate population, and develop the program to make a positive impact on healthcare delivery. This proposal will be presented to a faculty committee consisting of three faculty members for their approval.

NSG 481 and NSG 554 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 601
EVIDENCE-BASED PRACTICE RESEARCH II
Graduate
Students will submit individual objectives to the faculty advisor and committee who will guide the student through project implementation. Students will implement their evidence based Scholarly Leadership Project during this course.

NSG 602
SCHOLARLY LEADERSHIP PROJECT PRACTICUM
Graduate
Students will implement their Scholarly Leadership Project, and participate in a 100 hour clinical practicum. Students develop a rigorous program evaluation with the results of this project presented to their SLP Committee for approval.

NSG 603
SCHOLARLY LEADERSHIP PROJECT PRACTICUM CONTINUATION
Graduate
Student work continues on implementation and evaluation of their evidence-based scholarly leadership project (SLP). Upon completion the results of the SLP project will be presented to their SLP Committee for approval, followed by dissemination of an oral presentation and a manuscript deemed suitable for a peer-reviewed journal.

NSG 610
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM I
Graduate
An introduction to the clinical practice of nurse anesthesia with an emphasis on the principles introduced in ANES 500-504, 507, and 508. Includes administration of anesthesia for select patient populations under direct instruction and supervision of a certified registered nurse anesthetist (CRNA) or anesthesiologist. The course content focuses on specific general surgical procedures, including intra-abdominal, gynecological, urologic, ear, nose and throat, orthopedic, and endoscopic procedure. Content knowledge will be assessed through objective examinations. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be assessed through clinical performance evaluations and written care plans. Course includes Human Patient Simulation (HPS) assignments.

NSG 504 and NSG 507 are a prerequisite for this class.
NSG 611
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM II
Graduate
Includes administration of general and regional anesthesia for patients undergoing a variety of elective and emergency surgical procedures and diagnostic procedures. Management of special populations, including pediatric, obstetric, and geriatric patients is emphasized with a focus on the anatomical and physiological differences and pathological disorders that characterize each population. Content knowledge will be assessed through objective examinations. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be assessed through clinical performance evaluations and written care plans. Course includes Human Patient Simulation (HPS) assignments.

NSG 610 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 612
ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM III
Graduate
Includes administration of general and regional anesthesia for patients undergoing a variety of elective and emergency surgical procedures and diagnostic procedures. In addition to anesthetic management of the trauma patient, the course includes acute and chronic pain management, and advanced regional anesthetic techniques. Content knowledge will be assessed through objective examinations. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be assessed through clinical performance evaluations and critically assessed topics (CAT assignments). Course includes Human Patient Simulation (HPS) assignments.

NSG 611 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 613
ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM I
Graduate
The first in a series of advanced practicums that provides the third year DNP student with the opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate an anesthesia care plan for all patient populations with an emphasis on specialty surgical procedures, insertion of invasive monitoring and advanced airway management. Emphasis is placed on application, integration, and synthesis of knowledge, skills, and attitudes that are representative of the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. This advanced practicum provides the opportunity to explore the professional aspects of nurse anesthesia practice, link policy making with clinical systems, and translate research into practice. Includes seminar presentations on selected topics relative to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia and self assessment assignments.

NSG 612 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 614
ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM II
Graduate
The second in a series of advanced practicums that provides the third year DNP student with the opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate comprehensive anesthesia care plan for all patient populations undergoing a wide variety of diagnostic, surgical and therapeutic procedures. This advanced practicum provides the opportunity to explore the professional aspects of nurse anesthesia practice, link policy making with clinical systems, and translate research into practice. Includes critically appraised topics, case narratives and seminar presentations on selected topics relative to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. Course also includes Crisis Resource Management in the Human Patient Simulator (HPS).

NSG 613 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 615
ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM III
Graduate
The third advanced practicum for DNP students provides an opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate an anesthesia care plan for all patient populations undergoing a wide variety of surgical and therapeutic procedures. This advanced practicum provides the opportunity to explore the professional aspects and link policy making with clinical systems, translate research into practice and serve as change agents for health care. Includes critically appraised topics, case narratives, seminar presentations on selected topics relative to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia, and Crisis Resource Management in the Human Patient Simulator (HPS).

NSG 614 is a prerequisite for this class.
NSG 616
ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM IV
Graduate
The final advanced practicum in which the third year nurse DNP student demonstrates the advanced knowledge and skills that comprise a foundation for nurse anesthesia practice, the ability to work independently or as a contributing member of the anesthesia care team, adherence to professional standards as well as ethical and moral principles while providing care to a multicultural patient population, analysis and synthesis of current research that support evidence based anesthesia practice, an awareness of limited healthcare resources and cost containment strategies, the ability to perform a comprehensive self evaluation; and display of a professional attitude toward lifelong learning. The practicum includes completion of a final comprehensive exam, the Self Evaluation Exam (SEE) and professional portfolio, and presentation and dissemination of the Scholarly Leadership Project.

NSG 616 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 700
ADVANCED PRACTICUM FOR NURSE PRACTITIONERS I
Graduate
First of a series of two clinical courses that focus on developing proficiency in advanced nursing assessment and management for health promotion and disease prevention, management of complex health conditions, and working with interdisciplinary teams to provide care and services for persons across the lifespan. Students will ground their studies in the science of nursing interventions, moral/ethical issues, and nursing research. Practicum experiences are arranged to meet the individual needs of students while also meeting accreditation and certification requirements. This practicum provides an in-depth clinical experience for students in assessing an aggregate population within the context of a clinical setting, and developing programs to creatively and cost effectively affect changes in health care delivery. The clinical residency experience is facilitated by an advanced practice expert clinician, and forms the setting and basis for the Scholarly Leadership Project. There is no lecture/discussion component to this course. The student will meet with his/her course instructor on a regular basis for individual discussion and guidance in this Practicum course.

NSG 701
ADVANCED PRACTICUM FOR NURSE PRACTITIONERS II
Graduate
Second of a series of two clinical courses that emphasizes incorporating current research and demonstrating increasing autonomy and proficiency in decision making and case management. This advanced practicum provides the student with the opportunity to link policy making with clinical systems, translate research into practice, and serve as change agents for health care. In addition, this course provides the student with an opportunity to demonstrate expert knowledge, and expert clinical assessment and diagnostic skills when working with various patient populations. This practicum provides an in-depth clinical experience for students in assessing an aggregate population within the context of a clinical setting, and developing programs to creatively and cost effectively affect changes in health care delivery, and to evaluate those programs. The clinical residency experience is facilitated by an advanced practice expert clinician, and forms the setting and basis for the Scholarly Leadership Project. There is no lecture/discussion component to this course. The student will meet with his/her course instructor on a regular basis for individual discussion and guidance in this Practicum course.

ORGC 201
BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION
Undergraduate
Employers demand strong communication and presentation skills. In order to compete effectively in the job market, students need to acquire and practice the written and oral communication skills needed to interview successfully. Furthermore, as a professional you will not only be expected to be a confident speaker, but also to organize and prepare clear, concise and interesting presentations. You will also need to communicate effectively while working as the member of a team or in other group contexts. In developing the knowledge, competencies and skills needed to communicate effectively in these and other contexts, this course will embrace opportunities for both critical thinking and applied problem solving. (Formerly CMNS 201)

ORGC 212
SMALL GROUP COMMUNICATION
Undergraduate
A survey of the variables operating in group interactions. Combines principles with practice through participation in small group experiences. Topics include group formation, group formats, organizational approaches, decision-making models, group observation and evaluation. (Formerly CMNS 212)

This course focuses on the role of communication in organizational life. Attention will be devoted to exploring how communication simultaneously shapes and is shaped by organizations. Topics include conflict and mediation, stress and social support, the supervisor-subordinate relationships, workplace diversity, organizational consultation and new communication technologies in organizations. (Formerly CMNS 251)

ORGC 290
ORGANIZATIONAL COMMUNICATION WORKSHOP (VARIABLE TOPICS)
Undergraduate
This course allows students to sample a range of hands on, practical offerings in communication that can enhance their knowledge and expertise.

ORGC 316
COMMUNICATION AND GROUP DECISION-MAKING
Undergraduate
Advanced undergraduate course in small group communication. Students develop skills and abilities in identifying various factors that contribute to the success and failure of group decision-making in organizational contexts. Class sessions will focus on theories, research, and practices in group processes, and their applications to issues in real life. (Formerly CMNS 316)

ORGC 317
TOPICS IN GROUP COMMUNICATION
Undergraduate
Examines selected topics in group communication processes. Topics may include group creativity, communicating in virtual teams, conflict in groups, and group facilitation. (Formerly CMNS 317)

ORGC 332
TOPICS IN ORGANIZATIONAL COMMUNICATION METHODOLOGY
Undergraduate
Courses explore a range of qualitative and quantitative research strategies. Topics may include more specialized modes of gathering and assessing data, using new data technologies and software programs, and conducting communication studies. (Formerly CMNS 332)

ORGC 350
COMMUNICATION AND SOCIALIZATION TO WORK
Undergraduate
This course examines how human beings move through the world of work, paying particular attention to the role communication plays in this process. Often in our study of organizations, we overlook how the very nature of the work we do influences our behaviors, realities, and professional identities. This course draws from multiple disciplines in addition to Communication, in order to further our understanding of how different kinds of work get performed, situated, and embedded in our everyday lives. The class also focuses on meanings of work, various kinds of work across collar colors, and the dignity of labor. Students read and discuss a wide range of topics such as ?real? jobs, dirty jobs, emotional labor, and the influences of race, class, and gender on the social construction of work.

ORGC 352
COMMUNICATION AND THE CORPORATE CULTURE
Undergraduate
Focuses on the communicative implications of such cultural elements as values, heroes, rites, rituals, symbolism and storytelling. Analyzes and presents ways of adapting to the diverse components of a culture. (Formerly CMNS 352)

ORGC 353
COMMUNICATION AND ORGANIZATIONAL CHANGE
Undergraduate
Explores the impact of change on the day to day work experience of organizational members. How culture, management philosophy and individual performances are influenced by change. Political, symbolic interactional, and human resource perspectives are explored. (Formerly CMNS 353)
ORGC 354
EMPLOYMENT INTERVIEWING
Undergraduate
This course examines the theory and practice of on-the-job interviewing and is especially helpful to those students who will soon graduate and transition into the world of full-time work. Through the class, you will learn to: a) identify personal transferable skills acquired through a range of school and work activities and jobs; b) identify careers/professions whose functional makeup requires professionals with your skills; c) apply to an ideal job through a carefully crafted cover letter and resume; d) open and close any interview effectively; e) build an interview schedule for any information-seeking interview; f) align different types of questions with interview goals and in-the-moment interview developments; g) learn to avoid question-asking pitfalls; and h) respond effectively to competency-based employment interview questions. In this class, you will have the opportunity to practice your interviewing skills in simulated probing and employment screening interviews. While the principal emphasis of the class is on the employment screening interview, many interviewing skills and pitfalls that translate equally well to other interview contexts will be learned as well.

ORGC 355
CONFLICT MANAGEMENT

An exploration of theories of conflict and the intervention methods for dealing with conflicts at the interpersonal and group levels.

PAX 218
HUMAN RIGHTS: PROMISE AND PROBLEMATICS
Undergraduate
This course will explore the historical origins, foundational principles, and socio-political efficacy of human rights discourse in contemporary international relations, domestic politics, and ethical thought. It consider issues such as the religious and/or secular foundation of human rights; their universality in relation to particular cultural customs and norms; the relative priority of individual and collective rights; and the legitimacy of international humanitarian intervention in sovereign nations.

PAX 220
SOCIAL ENGAGEMENT FOR PEACE AND JUSTICE
Undergraduate
This course will look at the various ways in which people across the globe become engaged in social issues of importance, particularly those dealing with achieving justice and peace. Examples are human rights, environmental protection, labor issues, sustainable development alternatives, political representation, and gender issues.

PAX 231
ANALYZING POVERTY, ITS CAUSES AND CONSEQUENCES
Undergraduate
This course investigates a variety of viewpoints on the causes and effects of poverty. Poverty is a complex and multidimensional condition often difficult to measure, comprehend and change. It includes lack of or limited access to material needs (food, water, shelter, health care, etc.), social relations (participation, inclusion, rights, etc.), income and wealth (unemployment, resources, etc.) and moral, psychological, or spiritual well-being. This course reviews the current poverty debates from the economic, policy, social, political, cultural and moral perspectives that influence the implementation of poverty reduction programs.

PAX 235
THE ETHICS OF POVERTY
Undergraduate
This course reviews the current poverty debates from the economic, policy, social, political, and cultural perspectives that influence the implementation of poverty reduction programs, in order to bring an ethical analysis to bear on the degree of moral responsibility that can be argued for when seeking appropriate solutions to global poverty. Several ethical frameworks will be consider, allowing students to learn the critical application of arguments and evidence to a seemingly intransigent phenomenon.

PAX 240
VOICES OF WAR AND PEACE: ART, LITERATURE AND FILM
Undergraduate
This course is an overview of the ways in which the arts, including literature and film, portray warfare and the attempts to end violence and build reconciliation and peace.

PAX 241
HUMAN RIGHTS UNDER THE LENSES OF FILM AND OTHER ARTS
Undergraduate
This course is an overview of the ways in which the arts, including literature and film, portray situations in the United States and globally that limit human rights. Analyses of both the theoretical literature on human rights and the cinematic and other artistic attempts to capture both violations of human rights and the restoration and protection of these will be central to the course.

PAX 242
ACTING FOR SOCIAL JUSTICE: THE PORTRAYAL OF INJUSTICE IN FILM AND LITERATURE
Undergraduate
This course critically examines social justice themes in film and narrative literature (fictional and nonfictional) to see the role film and filmmaking and other narrative arts can play in social justice movements. It discusses a wide variety of depictions of social injustice in order to learn critical tools to analyze their representations of race, gender, class and their depiction of agency of their subjects in light of the characteristics of the media portraying them. It examine case studies of activists who are using film and literary arts as a part of movements for social justice.
Poverty is a complex and multidimensional condition often difficult to measure, comprehend and change. The use of film, literature and other arts allow for those who do not directly experience poverty to develop an understanding through their empathic responses to persons living in poverty. The course will use the lenses of film and literary analysis to measure the success of those uses, in light of a critical analysis of the need to alleviate poverty and its effects.

This course is an overview of the ways in which the arts, including literature and film, portray power and its effects, particularly where these are injust and oppressive. Different theories of power are investigated, so that students can begin a critical analysis of both the benefits and the limitations of the use of power and its effects on those using it well and abusing it. The ability of the arts to aid our understanding of power will be central to the course.

A workshop covering practical instruction in mediation, conflict resolution, and nonviolent methods for promoting social change.

A study of various understandings of “forgiveness” and “reconciliation” in several religions and cultures. The nature and dynamics of forgiveness and reconciliation will be examined both theoretically and in relationship to specific conflicts. Cross-listed with REL 252.

Reconciliation between people when there is disagreement or other forms of conflict or violence is a crucial process to alleviate the negative side of conflict. Love and hate are two of the strongest emotions and consequently can generate conflict. A philosophical analysis of these aspects of human existence can uncover resources for creative approaches to the forms of peace-building that include reconciliation processes, as well as provide ethical arguments for their value.

The idea of inner peace is a theme throughout the histories of many civilizations since recorded history. It provides a twin to the more obvious idea of outer peace, or peace in the environments surrounding us, whether the neighborhood, our tribes and social groups, our nation with other nations. This course will study theories of peace and how these correlate with the theme of inner peace. It will ask what practices have been used to promote or foster inner peace. It will bring a philosophical and critical lens to these theories and practices, whether they are found in religious texts, political understandings, personal narratives or fictional accounts, psychology, or phenomenological and other philosophical approaches to peace.

An exploration using the tools of both peace studies and historical studies to understand the different attempts to bring about a peaceful solution to a conflictual situation, whether this involves citizen refusal to accept a governmental stance (e.g., for military dictatorship, laws such as those for immigration) or actual aggressive events (international war, civil strife, oppressions through structural situations). The course will be comparative and interdisciplinary, but may focus on a single movement.
PAX 275
MOVEMENTS FOR GENDER AND TRANS JUSTICE
Undergraduate
An exploration using the tools of both justice studies and historical studies to understand the different aspects to bring about changes in the lives of those affected by unjust social structures and persons acting to limit their freedom due to gender or transgender factors. The course will be comparative and interdisciplinary, but may focus on a single movement.

PAX 278
DISABILITY RIGHTS MOVEMENT
Undergraduate
An exploration using the tools of both justice studies and historical studies to understand the different aspects to bring about changes in the lives of those affected by disabilities and the ways in which a culture and its laws and persons limit the freedom and basic rights of those living with disability. The course will be comparative and interdisciplinary, but may focus one or several aspects of the disabilities movement.

PAX 290
TOPICS ON JUSTICE AND PEACE
Undergraduate
A topics course geared to introductory level discussions of the core elements of justice and peace-building as they occur in specific venues, such as religion.

PAX 299
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
The student and faculty member will design a syllabus with readings and assignments appropriate for a lower division course in PJC.

Sophomore or above standing and at least one PAX course is a prerequisite for this class.

TOPICS SEMINAR
Undergraduate
A seminar on a key theoretical topic in the interdisciplinary fields covered by the Peace, Justice, and Conflict Studies Program, using a variety of theoretical positions.

(Two from PAX 200, 210, 212, 214, 220) or permission of the Program Director is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 303
BORDER MATTERS: LITERATURE & CULTURE IN THE LATINO/A BORDERLANDS
Undergraduate
In this course, we will study the values and dynamic that is promoted in different Latino communities in the United States. In order to give context to the present situation of Latinos in the U.S. we will study some of the social issues in the countries of origin which have resulted in immigration and their encounter with borderlands. The notion of a Latina and Latino cultural “borderlands” has proven a ubiquitous and powerful conceptual paradigm in recent years, organizing distinct ethnic groups (Cuban American, Mexican American, Central American, Puerto Rican, etc.) according to the rubrics of pan-ethnic identity labels (Hispanic, Latina/Latino, etc.) and transnational geographies (Latin America, the Americas, etc.). This course will examine a wide range of Latino/a literary expressions produced in the Latina/Latino borderlands, particularly in areas of cultural contact and conflict. While the most obvious focus will be the Texas-Mexico border region, including ongoing efforts to establish the public meaning of the Alamo, additional borderlands, literal and figurative, will be considered. The Latina and Latino borderlands have also inspired critics and theorists to imagine postmodern, post-national subject formations, in which questions of ethnicity, gender, and sexuality are shifted from the margins to the center of critical discourse. We will therefore investigate the use and limits of recent “border theory”. Cross-listed with LST 303.

PAX 320
TRANSFORMATIVE JUSTICE: THEORY AND PRACTICE
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to transformative justice responses to violence that do not rely on state institutions. These include collective processes for support and healing, intervention, accountability, and prevention. The pedagogical praxis of learning will be through communal peacemaking circles and collective strategy sessions to create community responses to violence. Cross-listed with WGS 320.
PAX 344
TOPICS IN ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE
Undergraduate
This course explores a specific topic in environmental justice, such as advocacy. For example, the roles of individuals and organizations in advocacy are discussed, particularly how power arrangements facilitate or impede consensus building, how legislation is written, and how this process impacts communities of color. Special attention is paid to advocacy techniques such as lobbying, movement-building, public education and litigation.

PAX 345
WOMEN, WAR, AND RESISTANCE
Undergraduate
This course aims to make feminist sense of contemporary wars and conflicts. It analyzes the intersections between gender, race, class, and ethnicity in national conflicts. The class traces the gendered processes of defining citizenship, national identity and security, and examines the role of institutions like the military in the construction of femininity and masculinity. The course focuses on the gendered impact of war and conflict through examining torture, mass rape, genocide, and refugee displacement. It analyzes the strategies used by women's and feminist movements to oppose war and conflict, and the gendered impact of war prevention, peacekeeping, and post-war reconstruction. The class draws on cases from Africa, the Americas, Asia, Europe, and the Middle East and North Africa. The class is interdisciplinary and gives equal weight to theory and practice while drawing on writings by local and global activists and theorists. Cross-listed with WGS 345.

PAX 348
INDIGENOUS POLITICAL STRUGGLES
Undergraduate
This course explores the struggles for social justice and the right to have rights by indigenous peoples. It emphasizes contemporary cases and the cultural contexts in which indigenous political strategies have developed and transformed. It uses historical data to understand the issues faced by indigenous peoples. Students conduct research on indigenous struggles and their connections to other social movements at the local, national, and international levels. Cross-listed with LST 348.

PAX 350
CAPSTONE IN PEACE, JUSTICE & CONFLICT STUDIES
Undergraduate
An integrative seminar drawing together students' theoretical work and hands-on expertise.

PAX 351
GEOGRAPHY, FOOD AND JUSTICE
Undergraduate
While the need for food is universal, geographies of food production, distribution and consumption are anything but even. This leads to multiple issues of food injustice at a variety of scales. This course critically examines the contemporary global food system with the goal of providing students with skills and knowledge to engage in food justice activism. Students study the development of food systems and how inequalities have emerged in production, distribution and consumption. The course then explores food justice movements including the emergence of alternative food networks in the U.S and internationally. Assignments may engage students in local food projects and or/advocacy campaigns. Cross-listed with GEO 351.

PAX 360
TOPICS IN DEVELOPMENT AND ANTI-DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
A survey of the problem of endemic poverty in the Third World, together with a consideration of the various forms of public action designed to alleviate poverty. Considerable attention will be paid to the problems of rural poverty and the pitfalls and possibilities of industrialization.

PAX 362

This course will use specific issues, groups, and actions to study how working for the just needs of communities occurs in a variety of ways and settings.

Two 200-level PAX courses are prerequisites for this course.

PAX 390
INTERNSHIP
Undergraduate
The internship as an independent project allows students to find a peace, justice, or conflict intervention organization that will give them a meaningful experience in the work of their organizations, or to sign up with a credit-bearing internship with another academic institution. Permission of the Director.

PAX 392
INTERNSHIP IN PEACE, JUSTICE, AND CONFLICT STUDIES
Undergraduate
The Internship in Peace, Justice and Conflict Studies exposes students to practical learning experiences in non-profit and government agencies through an intensive internship. Students work 100 hours with an organization arranged through Steans Center. Cross-listed with CSS 395.

One 200-level PAX course is a prerequisite for this course.

SENIOR THESIS
Undergraduate
Students have the option of completing a senior thesis on a topic relevant to their major under supervision of a PJC faculty member.

One 300-level PAX course is a prerequisite for this class.

PAX 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
The content and evaluation methods for this course are negotiated by the student with an individual faculty member.

PE 60
AEROBIC CONDITIONING
Undergraduate
This course provides instruction and requires participation in the dynamics of exercises that train the cardio respiratory system. These exercises include but are not limited to low-impact aerobics, high impact aerobics, step-aerobics, use of cardio equipment, spin, slide, and circuit training.

PE 66
BEGINNING WEIGHT TRAINING
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to strength training principles and activities: free weights, resistance machines, and functional exercises. Emphasis is placed on the development of strength and flexibility of the major muscle groups. Health-related fitness guidelines are presented to assist the student in developing overall fitness.
PE 70
ADVANCED AEROBIC CONDITIONING
Undergraduate
Advanced instruction in appropriate conditioning techniques and daily participation in monitored strenuous levels of aerobic exercise.

PE 060 is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 71
FITNESS AND CONDITIONING
Undergraduate
(2 credits) The main components of health-related fitness: cardiovascular endurance, muscular strength, muscular endurance, flexibility, and body composition are integrated into the fitness sessions, topic presentations, and health/fitness assessments. Emphasis is placed on improving overall wellness through exercise and healthy lifestyle choices.

PE 72
YOGA
Undergraduate
This course will introduce the philosophy, techniques, and benefits of Hatha Yoga to the beginning students and allow the experienced students to expand upon their knowledge. Participants will develop skills to deepen conscious awareness and focus through asana practice (physical practice of yoga), body alignment, breathing techniques, and relaxation. The emphasis of the class will be on how to properly practice yoga, how to incorporate it into daily life, and how to safely teach asana. Course modules will include physical practice, handouts, support materials, and a quiz. Students will be required to attend and participate in class. The development of an independent home practice of yoga outside of DePaul will be necessary for success in the course.

PE 76
ADVANCED WEIGHT TRAINING
Undergraduate
Advanced instruction and participation in the use of free weights and various machines for body building and weight training.

PE 066 is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 80
RAPE AGGRESSION DEFENSE SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
This 30-hour self-defense course is open to all female students and teaches awareness, prevention, risk reduction and avoidance techniques. In addition, students will learn the importance of physical fitness and perform exercises designed to improve their speed, physical strength and flexibility to aid them in self-defense. At the end of the course, students will be given the opportunity to test their knowledge and skills in various attack scenarios, under the supervision of at least one certified R.A.D. Basic Physical Defense instructor, in a safe and supportive environment.

PE 121
SWIMMING
Undergraduate
This course is designed to provide the student with skill instruction and analysis of the most widely used swimming strokes and basic dives. Principles of hydrodynamics and basic water safety will also be emphasized. Various individual skill levels will be considered to provide a safe and inclusive experience. Additionally, this course introduces the student to the concepts and procedures for teaching basic swimming in a school setting.

PE 151
GYMNASTICS
Undergraduate
This course introduces the student to the concepts and procedures for teaching basic gymnastics in a school setting. Emphasis will be given equally to skill acquisition, spotting techniques, explanation/demonstration of skills, and the theoretical framework that supports a gymnastics program. Students will be provided with the opportunity to acquire skills and spotting techniques for basic stunts, tumbling, balance, balance beam, parallel bars, vaulting, and rhythmic gymnastics.
PE 181
FLAG FOOTBALL
Undergraduate

Undergraduate
This course is designed to cover the scope of health services that could be provided through a comprehensive school health program. The school environment, community involvement, and legal/ethical considerations will be emphasized.

PE 311
MOTOR DEVELOPMENT THROUGHOUT THE LIFE SPAN
Undergraduate
Through lecture, film analysis, direct observation and instruction of children, and class discussion, students will gain a greater understanding of the maturational and environmental factors that affect human growth and motor development. Since this development is a process that continues throughout our life span, prenatal through adult characteristics will be examined.

PE 317
PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND CLASSROOM MANAGEMENT IN THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL
Undergraduate
The course is designed to promote an understanding of the contribution that physical education makes to the elementary school curriculum and the development of the whole child. Lesson planning, instructional delivery, assessment of learning and classroom management will be focused as students engage in 15-20 hours of supervised field experience teaching whole classes of children in local schools. This course is for Physical Education majors only; however, EE majors will be considered if the course is needed for student teaching in the subsequent quarter.

A Physical Education major in Advanced Standing is a prerequisite for this class.
This survey course explores the roles of language and literacy in the physical education setting and the teacher's responsibility for fostering them in all students. Through guided examination of prevailing theories of language acquisition and development that currently influence classroom practices across the K-12 continuum as well as across disciplinary and content areas, this course enables future teachers of physical education to grow in their understanding of the varied literacy-learning contexts that students bring to their physical education experiences. Issues that emerge in planning and conducting literacy instruction in programs with diverse student demographics are discussed and deliberated through University classroom sessions as well as required field experiences (10 hours, minimum; Level I). Course participants enjoy multiple opportunities to apply and analyze theories; to observe, critique, and practice planning as well as instructional strategies; to make informed curricular and instructional decisions; and to use assessment in conjunction with knowledge of child development to inform their planning. This course is designed to assist future teachers in producing students who are strategic readers, skilled speakers and writers, effective communicators, active listeners, independent and critical thinkers/learners, and problem solvers. Such teachers will exhibit awareness of their own metacognitive processes, respect for diversity, necessary social skills, and an ability to develop, set, and strive for professional goals. Candidates enrolled in this course will be encouraged to become education advocates, positive role models for their students, effective colleagues and collaborators, and lifelong learners.

This course will review the history of sport, fitness and physical education; the impact that events have had on their development; and how physical education, fitness and the use of sport is influenced by society. Emphasis will be placed on philosophical perspectives and ethical values of this profession, both for the educator and the sport & fitness management employee. Content is devoted to the study and understanding of sport and physical activity within numerous cultures throughout history to support diversity and help students consider the multiple perspectives expressed through the incorporation of sport and physical activity.

Organization and Administration of Physical Education, Sports, and Fitness Programs. Emphasis is placed on understanding the management process: functions, application to various settings, program development, budget, facilities, marketing/promotion, and risk management.

Biomechanical analysis of the human body and how the human body moves. Scientific principals and their application to human movement are included. Application is made to fundamental and specialized motor skills. Development and maintenance of the human structure through intelligent selection of activities and efficient use. Lecture is supplemented with in class laboratory activities.

Effects of muscular activity on the systems of the body. Nature of neuro-muscular activity, circulatory and respiratory adjustments during exercise, metabolic and environmental aspects of exercise, fatigue and training fitness. Lecture is supplemented with in class laboratory activities.

This course presents those principles of educational psychology specifically related to the psychomotor learning domain, the selection of tests to measure learning of physical skills for all populations, administration of tests, data collection, and the statistical analysis needed to evaluate the learning process. Specifically, measures of central tendency, variability and correlation statistics; and standard tests of health and skill related components of fitness, motor performance, anthropometry, and specific sport analysis will be included in this course.

DePaul University Autumn 2015-2016
PE 362
FITNESS TESTING, ASSESSMENT AND PRESCRIPTION
Undergraduate
This course is designed to provide theoretical knowledge of and select practical skills in fitness assessment, exercise program design, and client instruction in preparation for a national certification exam in personal training. Topics include guidelines for instructing safe, effective, and purposeful exercise, essentials of the client-trainer relationship, conducting health and fitness assessments, and designing and implementing appropriate exercise programming.

PE 372
METHODS AND MATERIALS FOR PHYSICAL EDUC CURRICULUM/INSTRUCTION-SECONDARY SCHL
Undergraduate
This course is designed to provide an understanding of physical education curriculum planning, teaching methods, classroom management, unit and lesson plans in a secondary school setting. Students will engage in 20-24 hours of field work to observe and participate in whole class instruction, in an attempt to integrate theoretical classroom content with on-site experiences.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 374
ADAPTED PHYSICAL EDUCATION
Undergraduate
Diversified program of development activities, games, sports and rhythms suited to the interests, capacities, and limitations of students with disabilities who may not be able to participate in the general physical education program.

BIO 201 and BIO 202, Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or students in BS-EXR-SCI plan, are prerequisites for this class.

PE 378
PHYSICAL EDUCATION STUDENT TEACHING IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION
Undergraduate
Five school days a week of supervised teaching in a cooperating elementary school for half an academic quarter. Feedback and discussion of problems encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching. Application and approval required. Open to only DePaul students.

PE 379
PHYSICAL EDUCATION STUDENT TEACHING IN SECONDARY EDUCATION
Undergraduate
Five school days a week of supervised teaching in a cooperating secondary school for half an academic quarter. Feedback and discussion of problems encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching. Application and approval required. Open only to DePaul students.

PE 380
INTERNSHIP IN EXERCISE SCIENCE
Undergraduate
Four hundred hours of supervised training in a health, fitness, sport, or exercise setting will be completed through this course. Students will receive practical experience in fitness testing, individual and group training, class instruction, program planning, and other facets of exercise science programming. Students will complete a project that will relate their educational background to the practical setting they have chosen to work in, and present their work to the internship site. Special interests of students will be addressed based on the internship site. Open only to students who have applied and been accepted by the exercise science program advisor and must have completed all coursework and clinical hours for the exercise science degree).

PE 384
PHYSICAL EDUCATION CAPSTONE
Undergraduate
The senior capstone course is designed to help students integrate the central emphases of their liberal learning studies curriculum into their professional behavior. It will provide prospective physical education teachers with opportunities to engage in activities requiring them to be reflective, to consider value commitments, to use critical and creative thinking, and to examine their practice from a multicultural perspective as they discuss issues specific to early childhood education. The course is grounded in the College of Education's framework for an Urban Professional Multicultural Educator, which also reflects the goals of the Liberal Studies program.
PE 387
CAPSTONE SEMINAR IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION & EXERCISE SCIENCE

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHL 325
BASIC CONCEPTS OF PHENOMENOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course emphasizes the principal themes of such thinkers as Husserl, Merleau-Ponty and Heidegger.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 327
TOPICS IN ETHICS
Undergraduate
A focused discussion of specific issues in moral and ethical philosophy.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 328
TOPICS IN ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
A focused discussion of specific issues in economic, social and political philosophy.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 330
JUNIOR HONORS OPTION
Undergraduate Junior Honors Option

PHL 340
PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION
Undergraduate
A study into the significance of religious phenomena for philosophy.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 341
AESTHETICS
Undergraduate
A study of the relationship of philosophy and the arts, with a critical appraisal of theories of beauty.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 342
PHILOSOPHY OF LAW
Undergraduate
An examination of fundamental legal concepts, and particularly of the concept of law itself.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 343
PHILOSOPHIES OF PUNISHMENT
Undergraduate
An examination of theories of punishment, particularly the two dominant western concepts of retributive and rehabilitative.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHL 350
PHILOSOPHY AND THE NATURAL SCIENCES
Undergraduate
Philosophy And The Natural Sciences

PHL 353
PHILOSOPHY AND HISTORY
Undergraduate
A study of some of the most significant theories of history. Cross-listed with HST 261.
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 354
PHILOSOPHY AND PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
A philosophical inquiry into the nature and history of psychology, psychoanalysis, and psychotherapy.
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 355
THEORIES OF INTERPRETATION
Undergraduate
Philosophical hermeneutics and Biblical interpretation. Cross-listed with CTH 336.
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 356
TOPICS IN POSTMODERNISM
Undergraduate
A philosophical study of selected themes concerning the condition of, and works about, postmodernity.
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 357
TOPICS IN PSYCHOANALYSIS
Undergraduate
Selected philosophical issues in psychoanalysis, for example, from early writers like Janet through contemporary theorists such as Irigaray.
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 360
GREEK PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 361
PLATO
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 362
ARISTOTLE
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHL 363
MEDI VAL AND REN AI SS ANCE PHI LOSOPHY
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 364
17TH AND 18TH CENTURY RATIONALISM
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 365
17TH AND 18TH CENTURY EMPI RICI SM
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 366
DESCAR TES
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 367
THE ENLIGHTENMENT
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 368
GERMAN IDEALISM
Undergraduate
German Idealism

PHL 369
KANT
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 370
HE GEL
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 371
19TH CENTURY PHI LOSOPHY
Undergraduate 19Th Century Philosophy

PHL 372
MARX
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHL 373
NIETZSCHE
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 375
PHENOMENOLOGY AND EXISTENTIALISM
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 376
AMERICAN PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 377
PHILOSOPHY AND DECONSTRUCTION
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 378
ANALYTIC PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 379
EASTERN THOUGHT
Undergraduate Eastern Thought

PHL 380
SELECTED FIGURES AND TEXTS
Undergraduate
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 381
DRAMATIC THEORY: TRAGEDY
Undergraduate
A study of some of the main philosophical theories of tragedy together with readings of some of the most important ancient and modern tragedies. Cross-listed with THE 224.
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 382
DRAMATIC THEORY: COMEDY
Undergraduate
A study of some of the main philosophical theories of comedy together with readings of some of the most important ancient and modern comedies. Cross-listed with THE 225.
PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHL 383
PHILOSOPHICAL THEMES IN LITERATURE
Undergraduate
An investigation of philosophical topics as they appear in fiction, drama, and poetry.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 386
PHILOSOPHIES OF AFRICA
Undergraduate
A study of patterns of philosophical thinking from the African continent.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 387
TOPICS IN ASIAN PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
Focuses on a particular issue, figure, or period in Asian philosophy. Topics will vary according to instructor.

PHL 388
TOPICS IN COMPARATIVE PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
Draws on philosophies from different cultures to explore philosophical issues from a comparative perspective. Topics and areas will vary according to instructor.

PHL 389
LATIN AMERICAN PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
What does it mean to speak of Latin American philosophy? What is the difference between merely doing philosophy in Latin America and doing Latin American philosophy? These are issues that some thinkers in Latin America grapple with. This course will explore the history and nature of Latin American philosophy. Moreover, we shall examine some of the reasons why, in sharp contrast to the European and Anglo-American philosophical traditions, questions of the very existence of an autochthonous Latin American philosophical tradition are heatedly debated both in Latin America and beyond.

PHL 390
SELECTED TOPICS AND CONTROVERSIES
Undergraduate
SELECTED TOPICS AND CONTROVERSIES

PHL 391
SENIOR CAPSTONE SEMINAR
Undergraduate
A capstone seminar on selected topics in philosophy, that integrates the goals of the liberal studies program.

PHL 392
TOPICS IN FEMINIST PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
Selected issues or approaches within feminist work, such as feminist metaphysics, feminist peace theory, particular feminist figures, and the like.

PHL 100 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHL 393
TOPICS IN CRITICAL RACE THEORY
Undergraduate
A study of the intersection of issues from critical race theory and feminist/gender studies.

PHL 393 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 394
TOPICS IN POSTCOLONIALISM
Undergraduate
Selected philosophical issues in postcolonial writings, such as notions of identity and place, key figures, representation and film, and the like.

PHL 394 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 395
SENIOR THESIS
Undergraduate
An opportunity for intensive independent work, open to philosophy majors of outstanding achievement. By petition only. Contact the department office for further information. Philosophy 395 is not applicable to major field requirements, though it may be used as an open elective. Permission required.

PHL 396
INDIAN PHILOSOPHY
Undergraduate
An investigation into various philosophies as they originated in India, for instance, Hinduism substance metaphysics, Buddhist process metaphysics, Charvakan materialism.

PHL 396 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 398
TRAVEL/STUDY
Undergraduate
By arrangement with sponsoring faculty, foreign and domestic travel or residence programs may be combined with lectures, readings, and research assignments. Variable credit.

PHL 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
Independent Study

PHL 399 or HON 105 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHL 400
SPECIAL TOPICS IN TRADITIONAL PHILOSOPHERS
Graduate
Special Topics In Traditional Philosophers

PHL 410
PLATO I
Graduate
A study of Plato's life and early dialogues.

PHL 411
PLATO II
Graduate
A study of the middle and later dialogues.
A study of Aristotle's life and selected topics of his theoretical philosophy: organon, physics, psychology, and metaphysics.

A study of aspects of Aristotle's practical and productive philosophy: ethics, politics, rhetoric, and poetics.

A study of Augustine's philosophy through an examination of some of his major writings.

A study of his philosophy, especially its relations to theology, through an examination of selected major works.

An examination of Hobbes' role as the father of modern political philosophy: a study of the Leviathan and the Elements of Law.

An examination of Descartes' role as the father of modern philosophy; issues of the Regulae, the Discours, and the Meditations.

A study of the major theoretical works.

A study of the major philosophical works.

A study of the Ethics and/or the Theologico-Political Treatise.

A study of the major theoretical works.
PHL 443
MEDICAL LEGAL ETHICS
Graduate
An examination of contemporary problems in the area of medical legal ethics.

PHL 445
HUME
Graduate
An examination of Hume's place in classical British empiricism; a study of A Treatise of Human Nature.

PHL 470
PHILOSOPHY OF WITTGENSTEIN
Graduate

PHL 500
SPECIAL TOPICS IN THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY
Graduate
None

PHL 510
KANT I
Graduate
An introduction to the critical philosophy of Kant by concentrating on the Critique of Pure Reason.

PHL 511
KANT II
Graduate
A study of the Critique of Practical Reason or the Critique of Judgment.

PHL 512
KANT III
Graduate
Kant III: Kant's Political Writings

PHL 515
HEGEL I
Graduate
An Introduction to Hegel: The Phenomenology of Spirit.

PHL 516
HEGEL II
Graduate
Readings in the Science of Logic or the Philosophy of Right.

PHL 517
HOLDERLIN
Graduate
An examination of the major theoretical writings, ca. 1797-1804.

PHL 518
SCHELING
Graduate
An examination of the treatise on human freedom (1809).
PHL 520
MARX I
Graduate
An introduction to Marx through a study of selected topics and works.

PHL 521
MARX II
Graduate
A study of selected topics and works from both Marx/Engels and their disciples.

PHL 522
SOCIAL AND POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY
Graduate
None

PHL 525
NIETZSCHE
Graduate
An introduction to the philosophy of Nietzsche through Beyond Good and Evil, Thus Spake Zarathustra and selected topics and works.

PHL 527
PHILOSOPHY, ETHICS, AND ECONOMICS
Graduate
An examination of classical and contemporary theories from Smith and Marx to Friedman, Held and others.

PHL 535
HUSSERL I
Graduate
An introduction to Husserl through a study of selected topics and works.

PHL 536
HUSSERL II
Graduate
Selected topics and works.

PHL 550
HEIDEGGER I
Graduate
An introduction to Heidegger through study of a major work and one of the Marburg lectures.

PHL 551
HEIDEGGER II
Graduate
Selected topics and questions.

PHL 552
HEIDEGGER III
Graduate
Heidegger III
PHL 557
TOPICS IN CONTINENTAL PHILOSOPHY
Graduate
None

PHL 559
FOUCAULT
Graduate
An introduction to Foucault through a study of selected topics and works.

PHL 560
THE PHILOSOPHY OF GABRIEL MARCEL
Graduate
The Philosophy Of Gabriel Marcel

PHL 561
LYOTARD
Graduate
An introduction to Lyotard through a study of selected topics and works.

PHL 565
MERLEAU-PONTY I
Graduate
A study of The Phenomenology of Perception with consideration given to Merleau-Ponty's place in contemporary philosophy.

PHL 566
MERLEAU-PONTY II
Graduate
A study of the themes of his social philosophy and final ontology.

PHL 570
SARTRE I
Graduate
A study of Being and Nothingness with attention given to Sartre's early phenomenological studies as background and to some of his literary works and criticism, such as Nausea and Saint-Genet.

PHL 571
SARTRE II
Graduate
The social thought of Jean-Paul Sartre. A study of A Critique of Dialectic Reason along with appropriate literary works and more recent political writings.

PHL 577
DERRIDA I
Graduate
An introduction to Derrida through a study of selected topics and works.

PHL 578
DERRIDA II
Graduate
Selected topics and questions.
PHL 585
RICOEUR
Graduate
A study of Ricoeur's philosophy and phenomenology of the will with stress on its background and its place in contemporary French phenomenology.

PHL 586
METAPHOR AND POETIC LANGUAGE
Graduate
An examination of Ricoeur's work in poetics.

PHL 587
READING LEVINAS I
Graduate
Reading Levinas I

PHL 588
READING LEVINAS II
Graduate
Reading Levinas II

PHL 589
PHILOSOPHY, LITERATURE, COMMUNITY
Graduate
Discussion of such thinkers as Bataille, Derrida, Jabes, and Nancy.

PHL 590
TRENDS IN CONTEMPORARY FRENCH PHILOSOPHY
Graduate
A look at the increasing importance of structuralism, deconstruction, philosophy of language, and hermeneutics in contemporary French thought.

PHL 591
CRITICAL RACE THEORY
Graduate
Critical Race Theory.

PHL 600
SEMINAR ON AMERICAN THOUGHT
Graduate
None

PHL 601
SEMINAR ON AESTHETICS
Graduate
SEMINAR ON AESTHETICS

PHL 629
SEMINAR ON CONTEMPORARY PROBLEMS
Graduate
None
PHL 640
PROBLEMS IN ETHICS
Graduate
A seminar in business ethics that centers on theoretical, practical, and pedagogical issues.

PHL 641
SEMINAR ON THE CONTINENTAL TRADITION IN ETHICS
Graduate
A comparative discussion of the ethical theories of Scheler, Hartmann, Brentano, Levinas, etc.

PHL 651
TOPICS IN BUSINESS ETHICS
Graduate
A seminar in business ethics that centers on theoretical, practical, and pedagogical issues.

PHL 656
SEMINAR ON SOCIAL AND POLITICAL THOUGHT
Graduate
A study of selected writings of key social and political thinkers.

PHL 657
TOPICS IN SOCIAL AND POLITICAL THOUGHT
Graduate
Topics In Social And Political Thought

PHL 660
SEMINAR IN FEMINIST ETHICS
Graduate
Examination of the care perspective as compared to the justice perspective on moral development. Cross-listed as MLS 477 and WMS 410.

PHL 661
TOPICS IN FEMINIST THEORY
Graduate
Includes such themes as feminist ontologies, theories of discourse and writing, science and technology, etc.

PHL 697
GRADUATE TEACHING PRACTICUM
Graduate
Examination of teaching method concepts.

PHL 698
MASTER’S THESIS RESEARCH
Graduate

PHL 699
DISSERTATION RESEARCH
Graduate
Students admitted to candidacy who have completed all Ph.D. course requirements and who are actively working on their dissertations during the quarter are to register by permission of the graduate director. Students are required to be registered for either PHL 701: Candidacy Continuation or PHL 799: Candidacy Maintenance each quarter of the academic year until the dissertation has been defended and the degree completed. The latter course, PHL 799, is to be used during quarters when the student is not actively doing dissertation work.

Ph.D. Candidates who are not actively working on their dissertations during a given quarter but who want to maintain active university status can register for this course by permission of the graduate director. Please note that this course does not maintain student status for purposes of student loans.

This course focuses on the development of our knowledge about the Solar System with an emphasis on the origin, structure and motion of the planets and the Sun. Topics include both historical astronomy and our current understanding based on information from spacecraft sent to other planets. Cannot receive credit for both PHY 104 and PHY 114.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

Introduction to analog electronics that develops the basic principles needed to understand consumer electronics. Emphasis is given to audio applications, but the same basic principles are the foundation of modern computer technology.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

Activity-based course that compares the local environment of Earth in the Solar System to worlds and environments elsewhere in the Universe. Cannot receive credit for both PHY 104 and PHY 114.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

This course will develop an understanding of the physics of everyday objects and experiences such as bouncing balls, roller coasters, balloons, thermostats, violins, microwave ovens and sun glasses. The relevant physics concepts will be introduced through demonstrations and simple experiments.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.
PHY 150
GENERAL PHYSICS I
Undergraduate
This course provides a comprehensive, non-calculus introduction to physics. Vectors, forces, Newtonia mechanics of translational and rotational motion. This course is intended for life science and health science majors.

MAT 131 or above is a prerequisite for this class.

PHY 151
GENERAL PHYSICS II
Undergraduate
Continuation of PHY 150. Topics include heat, thermodynamics, sound and light.

PHY 150 or PHY 170 is a prerequisite for this class.

PHY 152
GENERAL PHYSICS III
Undergraduate
Continuation of PHY 151. Topics include electricity, magnetism and modern physics.

PHY 151 or PHY 172 is a prerequisite for this class.

PHY 155
GENERAL PHYSICS
Undergraduate
A combination of Physics 150 plus half of 151. Summer only.

MAT 131 or above is a prerequisite for this class.

PHY 156
GENERAL PHYSICS
Undergraduate
A combination of the last half of Physics 151 plus 152. Summer only.

PHY 155, PHY 151, or PHY 171 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 170
UNIVERSITY PHYSICS I
Undergraduate
This course provides a comprehensive, calculus-based introduction to Newtonian mechanics. Topics include vectors, Newton’s laws, linear and rotational motion. Course intended for majors in a physical science, required for the physics major. Autumn. COREQUISITE(S): MAT 147 or MAT 160 or MAT 170.

MAT 147 or MAT 160 or MAT 170 is a corequisite for this class.

PHY 171
UNIVERSITY PHYSICS II
Undergraduate
A continuation of PHY 170. Topics include heat, sound and light. Winter. COREQUISITE(S): MAT 161 or 171 or 148.

PHY 170 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 172
UNIVERSITY PHYSICS III
Undergraduate
A continuation of PHY 171. Topics include electricity and magnetism. Spring. COREQUISITE(S):MAT 162 or 172 or 149.

PHY 171 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHY 190
MATLAB PROGRAMMING FOR SCIENTISTS AND MATHEMATICIANS
Undergraduate
Introduction to the Matlab Programming environment with an emphasis on applications of interest to science and mathematics students. Topics include basic operations, functions and scripts, arguments and scope, and graphics. Applications include curve fitting, visualization of data, root finding, and solving systems of equations.

PHY 200
LIGHT AND ATOMS
Undergraduate
A conceptual treatment of light and matter, which emphasizes the counter-intuitive behavior of atoms, electrons and photons. Topics covered include the electrical nature of matter, wave-particle duality, the uncertainty principle, and philosophical implications. Some applications to technology will also be discussed such as lasers, fiber optic communication, superconductivity, and magnetic storage of data.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 204
FRONTIERS OF THE UNIVERSE
Undergraduate
Focuses on the tremendous increase in our understanding of the universe beyond the Solar System that has occurred in recent years. Topics include stellar evolution, the properties of stars, supernova explosions, black holes, galaxies, and the origin of the universe.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 205
EINSTEIN'S PECULIAR IDEAS
Undergraduate
A conceptual treatment of Einstein's groundbreaking ideas about space, time, and the nature of reality. Topics covered include special relativity, Einstein's contributions to quantum physics, including his criticisms of its orthodox interpretation, and some aspects of his theory of gravity. Aspects of Einstein's thoughts on social issues will also be briefly discussed.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 206
SOUND AND ACOUSTICS
Undergraduate
Sound waves, their production, transmission and detection; applications to music, acoustics and noise pollution.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 220
OCEANOGRAPHY
Undergraduate
Develops the concepts of physical oceanography. Topics include the chemical and physical properties of seawater, the dynamics of ocean currents and circulations, the physics of water waves and tides, the interaction of the ocean with the atmosphere, the formation of coastlines, and the effects of pollution on the ocean. Cross-listed with GEO 220.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 223
LIGHT, COLOR, AND PHOTOGRAPHY
Undergraduate

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.
PHY 225
WEATHER AND CLIMATE
Undergraduate
Develops the physical concepts needed to understand the atmosphere, the oceans, and their interactions with the aim of building a conceptual model of weather and climate. Long-term climate variability and climate related environmental issues are also discussed. Cross-listed with GEO 225.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 231
LINEAR ELECTRIC CIRCUITS
Undergraduate
Frequency response and feedback, operational amplifiers as linear amplifiers, active filters, oscillators, communication circuits and data conversion circuits.

PHY 110 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 232
INTRODUCTION TO DIGITAL ELECTRONICS
Undergraduate

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 236
THE SCIENCE OF DIGITAL AUDIO
Undergraduate
Introduction to the physics and mathematics of digital audio, including the conversion of sound energy into electrical signals, the digitization of the signal, conversion of the signal to a standard format, storage of the signal on a hard disk or a CD, and manipulation of the digitized signal. Also includes a discussion of the ethics and legality of downloading digitized audio, in the context of intellectual property rights. This course assumes familiarity with trigonometric mathematical functions.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 270
UNIVERSITY PHYSICS IV
Undergraduate
An introduction to 20th-century physics. Topics include special relativity, quantum mechanics, and statistical analysis of data.

PHY 172 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 300
METHODS OF COMPUTATIONAL AND THEORETICAL PHYSICS I
Undergraduate
Computational and theoretical methods in ordinary differential equations, complex numbers, systems of equations, phase plane analysis, bifurcations. Applications to damped, driven oscillators, electronics. COREQUISITE(S):MAT 261.

PHY 301
METHODS OF COMPUTATIONAL AND THEORETICAL PHYSICS II
Undergraduate
Fourier series, Fourier transforms, partial differential equations, Legendre polynomials, special functions. Applications to wave motion, electricity and magnetism, modern physics, optics. Spring

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHY 310
MECHANICS I
Undergraduate
Newtonian motion in a one-, two-, and three-dimensional motion, conservative systems, variational principles, Lagrangian and Hamiltonian mechanics, central-force problems.

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 311
MECHANICS II
Undergraduate
Continuation of PHY 310. Topics include systems of particles, collisions and scattering, motion in rotating frames, rigid body motion.

PHY 310 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 315
CHAOS IN PHYSICAL SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
Motion in phase space, characteristics of chaotic systems, Lyapunov exponents, stability of equilibrium solutions, strange attractors, bifurcations, discrete dynamics, and applications to lasers, fluids, and other physical systems.

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 320
ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM I
Undergraduate
Solutions to electrostatic, magnetostatics, and boundary-value problems. Introduction to Coulomb's law, Gauss's law, Biot-Savart law, and electric and magnetic potentials.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 321
ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM II
Undergraduate
A continuation of PHY 320. Topics include Maxwell's equations, time varying fields, electromagnetic waves, and radiation.

PHY 320 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 325
LASER PHYSICS
Undergraduate
Interaction of radiation and matter, pumping mechanisms for lasers, optical resonators, cw and transient laser behavior, laser types, current topics in optical physics. Cross-listed as PHY 425

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 330
SENIOR CAPSTONE PHYSICAL SCIENCE
Undergraduate
Senior Capstone in the Physical Sciences. Topics in the physical sciences and their social, political, environmental and economic impact.

Student standing of at least junior level is a prerequisite for this course.
The spontaneous formation of structure is one of the most interesting phenomenon in nature and arises in fields as diverse as physics, chemistry, biology, management, economics, and sociology. Many self-organizing systems show similarities in the way the structure arises, indicating that there are underlying general principles that govern these systems. This course will investigate these principles. PHY 340 or consent recommended.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

Statistical interpretation of the fundamental concepts of thermodynamics and its physical applications.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

Computational solution and simulation of physical systems; applications chosen from nonlinear dynamics, optics, central-force motion, fluids, condensed matter.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

Matrix methods for image formation, diffraction, interferometry, coherence, scattering, polarization, holography, Fourier transform spectroscopy. PHY 320 recommended.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

Solution of Maxwell's equations for dielectric waveguides, optical communications, nonlinear effects in dielectric waveguides, and current research. PHY 321 recommended. Cross-listed with PHY 456.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

Introduction to quantum mechanics, including the solution of the Schrödinger equation in one and three dimensions for a variety of potentials. Applications to atomic systems and solids.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

Continuation of PHY 360. Applications of quantum mechanics, including time-independent and time-dependent perturbation theory, the variational principle, and an introduction to scattering theory.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHY 365
NUCLEAR PHYSICS
Undergraduate
Theoretical and phenomenological approaches to nuclear structure and strong, electromagnetic, and weak interactions of nuclei. Topics of study include the theory of scattering and decay of nuclei, resonances, nuclear models.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 366
RADIATION PHYSICS
Undergraduate
Radioactive decay processes, interactions of radiation with matter, general properties of radiation detectors, and applications to basic nuclear spectroscopy, health physics and medical physics. Cross-listed w/ PHY 466.

PHY 270 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 370
ELECTRONICS
Undergraduate
A laboratory course covering analysis and construction of analog and digital circuits used in experimental research.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 375
INTRODUCTION TO COSMOLOGY
Undergraduate
Provides a foundation to the core concepts of cosmology, with an emphasis on developing physical insight. Discusses recent major developments in cosmology, such as the cosmological constant and accelerating universe, and key future developments, including details of the cosmic microwave background and gravitational wave detection. PHY 310 recommended.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 378
TOPICS IN APPLIED PHYSICS
Undergraduate
Current topics in applied physics, as determined by the interests of the instructor and students.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 380
EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS I
Undergraduate
Experimental techniques in optics, atomic and nuclear physics. Approved for Experiential Learning Credit. Laboratory.

PHY 270 and PHY 301 are a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 381
EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS II
Undergraduate
Experimental techniques in solid-state and high-vacuum physics. Laboratory.

PHY 380 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 382
EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS III
Undergraduate
Experimental Physics III (laboratory)

PHY 381 is a prerequisite for this course.
PHY 384
ADVANCED LABORATORY
Undergraduate
Variable credit Laboratory experience in techniques selected in consultation with instructor.

PHY 385
INTRODUCTION TO PHYSICS EDUCATION RESEARCH
Undergraduate
This course covers effective teaching methods for physics, findings from physics education research, and the use of technology in physics classrooms. Course is required to serve as a Teaching Assistant within the department. Cross listed with PHY 485
PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 390
APPLIED COMPUTATIONAL PHYSICS LABORATORY
Undergraduate
Project-based computational laboratory of problems in modern applied physics. Numerical modeling of experiments, computer interfacing of experiments, computational techniques in data analysis.
PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 391
ELECTRONIC PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS
Undergraduate
The free-electron gas model, energy band theory, theory of metals and alloys, transport phenomena, dia-and para-magnetism, ferromagnetism, and antiferromagnetism, superconductivity.
PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 392
STRUCTURAL PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS
Undergraduate
Periodicity, symmetry and classification of crystal structure, X-ray diffraction, reciprocal lattice, crystal binding, Debye theory of heat capacity, anharmonic interactions, point defects, surfaces.
PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 395
METHODS OF THEORETICAL PHYSICS
Undergraduate
Special functions, complex integration, calculus of variations, coordinate transformations.
PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 398
READING AND RESEARCH
Undergraduate
Undergraduate research participation. Variable credit.
Student standing of at least junior level is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
Independent Study. Variable credit.
PHY 400
CLASSICAL MECHANICS FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Concepts and materials for teaching mechanics as part of high school physics. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 401
ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
The principles of electricity and magnetism, including electric circuits. This level is appropriate for regular and AP high school Physics teachers. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 402
ATOMIC AND NUCLEAR PHYSICS FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
This course provides a broad perspective for teachers. It includes atomic, nuclear and some particle physics. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 403
TOPICS IN PHYSICS TEACHING
Graduate
Selected topics for high school teachers. May be taken more than once. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 404
OPTICS FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Geometrical and physical optics from the perspective of high school teaching. Applications to photography and holography. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 406
VIBRATIONS, WAVES AND SOUND FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Techniques for teaching high school science including musical acoustics and sound reproduction. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 410
CHAOS IN PHYSICAL SYSTEMS
Graduate
Motion in phase space, characteristics of chaotic systems, Lyapunov exponents, stability of equilibria, strange attractors, bifurcations, discrete dynamics, applications to lasers, fluids, and other physical systems.

PHY 411
ELECTRODYNAMICS I
Graduate
Electrostatics and magnetostatics in vacuum and in media; electromagnetic induction; Maxwell's equations; the Poynting vector; electromagnetic wave propagation.

PHY 412
QUANTUM MECHANICS I
Graduate
Schroedinger equation, operators, eigenvalues; series of eigenfunctions; physical interpretation; one- and three-dimensional applications.
PHY 420
ELECTRODYNAMICS II
Graduate
Further studies of electromagnetic wave propagation; scattering; dispersion; bounded structures and guided waves; electromagnetic radiation, including multipole radiations and radiation from systems of radiators.

PHY 411 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 425
LASER PHYSICS
Graduate
Interaction of radiation and matter, pumping mechanisms for lasers, optical resonators, cw and transient laser behavior, laser types, current topics in optical physics. Cross-listed with PHY 325.

PHY 435
NON-EQUILIBRIUM PHYSICS AND SELF-ORGANIZATION
Graduate
The spontaneous formation of structure is one of the most interesting phenomenon in nature and arises in fields as diverse as physics, chemistry, biology, management, economics, and sociology. Many self-organizing systems show similarities in the way the structure arises, indicating that there are underlying general principles that govern these systems. This course will investigate these principles. PHY 340 or consent recommended.

PHY 440
CLASSICAL MECHANICS
Graduate
Variational principles; Lagrangian and Hamiltonian mechanics; small oscillations; canonical transformations; Hamilton-Jacobi theory.

PHY 442
COMPUTATIONAL PHYSICS
Graduate
Contemporary Topics in physics are examined via numerical solutions. Calculations using an interactive approach and graphical representation are used extensively.

PHY 445
STATISTICAL MECHANICS
Graduate
Principles of statistical mechanics; applications to weakly interacting systems such as the classical plasma and Fermi gas; strongly interacting systems; transport theory; fluctuations and irreversible processes, phase transitions.

PHY 450
PHASE TRANSITIONS & CRITICAL PHENOMENA
Graduate
Applications of equilibrium statistical mechanics to the study of phase transitions and critical phenomena. Topics include the Ising model of magnetism, critical phenomena in fluids, mean field theory, Landau-Ginzburg theory, and the renormalization group.

PHY 340 and PHY 445 are prerequisites for this course.

PHY 454
FOURIER OPTICS
Graduate
Fourier Optics and optical processing of information. Topics include diffraction theory, optical transfer functions and holography. The Fourier Transform and Fast Fourier Transform are used extensively.
PHY 456
FIBER OPTICS
Graduate
(Cross-listed as PHY 356) Solution of Maxwell's equations for dialectic wave guides, optical communications, nonlinear effect in dialectic wave guides, and current research.

PHY 460
QUANTUM MECHANICS II
Graduate
Review of basic quantum theory; vector spaces; linear operators; observables; commutators; projection operations; representations; angular momentum theory; systems of identical particles; invariance.

PHY 412 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 465
NUCLEAR PHYSICS
Graduate
Theoretical and phenomenological approaches to nuclear structure and strong, electromagnetic, and weak interactions of nuclei. Topics of study include the theory of scattering and decay of nuclei, resonances, nuclear models.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 466
RADIATION PHYSICS
Graduate
Interactions of X-rays, nuclear radiations, etc. with matter; radiation detectors; dosimetry; shielding; applications to medical physics. Cross-listed with PHY 366.

PHY 475
INTRODUCTION TO COSMOLOGY
Graduate
Provides a foundation to the core concepts of cosmology, with an emphasis on developing physical insight. Discusses recent major developments in cosmology, such as the cosmological constant and accelerating universe, and key future developments, including details of the cosmic microwave background and gravitational wave detection.

PHY 478
TOPICS IN APPLIED PHYSICS
Graduate
This course number is reserved for Individual study at the graduate level. Special seminars organized from time to time to accommodate the needs of groups of students in specialized subjects of topical interest.

PHY 480
THESIS RESEARCH
Graduate
This course number designates research performed to gather thesis material. Up to two registrations are allowed. No less than four quarter hours; no more than eight quarter hours total credit.

PHY 485
INTRODUCTION TO PHYSICS EDUCATION RESEARCH
Graduate
This course covers effective teaching methods for physics, findings from physics education research, and the use of technology in physics classrooms. Course is required to serve as a Teaching Assistant within the department. Cross listed with PHY 385.
PHY 490
STRUCTURAL PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS
Graduate
Periodicity, symmetry and classification of crystal structure; X-ray diffraction; reciprocal lattice; crystal binding. Debye theory of heat capacity; anharmonic interactions; point defects; surfaces.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 491
ELECTRONIC PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS
Graduate
The free-electron gas model; energy band theory; theory of metals and alloys; transport phenomena; dia- and para-magnetism, ferromagnetism, and antiferromagnetism; superconductivity.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 495
METHODS OF THEORETICAL PHYSICS
Graduate
Special functions, complex integration, calculus of variations, coordinate transformations. Cross-listed with PHY 395.

PHY 701
CANDIDACY CONTINUATION
Graduate
Non-credit. Students who are not registered for regular courses will be permitted to register in this course only if they are actively working on their thesis.

PHY 702
CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE
Graduate
Placeholder course for students not actively working on their thesis. This course is meant only to maintain university student status, it will not give the student full- or part-time student status and will not permit deferment of student loans.

PM 430
FUNDAMENTALS OF IT PROJECT MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course concentrates on monitoring, managing and controlling assets and resources on a single IT project. Topics covered are risk management; procurement and contract management; time and cost estimating; controlling and tracking techniques; quality assurance; testing and audit. Students will use common project management software for resource allocation and balancing. PREREQUISITE(S): None

PM 440
COLLABORATIVE TECHNOLOGIES FOR LEADING PROJECTS
Graduate
Study of the process of virtual teaming with emphasis on facilitation of different time project activities and facilitation of same time meetings. Students will learn how small group psychology and group communication theories inform specific behaviors in the design and leadership of meetings. Several meeting types including information briefing, focus group, document writing, decision making, requirements gathering, and teaching/training will be explored. In addition, the course surveys current collaboration technologies and discusses how to select among those technologies usability and fit to purpose of a meeting agenda. DL students may be required to schedule same time sessions with the instructor and other DL students; see current quarter syllabus for more information on this point. PREREQUISITE(S): None
PM 535
INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY INVESTMENT FINANCIAL ANALYSIS
Graduate
This course focuses on the application of financial analysis and decision-making approaches to aid information technology investment decisions at the operational, project, tactical and strategic levels. Students will learn how to apply a variety of financial methods -- breakeven analysis, present value analysis, profitability index, and return on investment to various IT investment decisions. The course will also address cost benefit analysis, outsourcing, balanced scorecard, and multi-factor scoring, benchmarking, and IT investment portfolio methods. These techniques will prepare students to manage capital budgets, acquisition of system and application software, hardware, personnel, and professional services at project and system levels as well as enterprise investment portfolio. PREREQUISITE(S): IS 425 or SE 477 or IS 565 or ACCT 500 or IS 430 or PM 430 or ECT 455

PM 556
ENTERPRISE PROJECT MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course covers how an enterprise coordinates and effectively manages all its IT projects and programs through program management and the IT program management office. Students will learn the role of the IT program management office in establishing and maintaining the project and program infrastructure and in assisting project managers, program managers, and the executive steering committee. Students will analyze the role of program management in coordinating the delivery of expected program benefits, in managing stakeholder expectations, and in establishing program governance. PREREQUISITE(S): IS 430 or PM 430

PM 570
ENTERPRISE SYSTEM IMPLEMENTATION
Graduate
This course is targeted towards information systems professionals who are involved in the planning and implementation of large scale, cross-functional enterprise systems. Students will examine the characteristics of technology efforts that change and transform the way people perform their tasks and how the new technology structures the flows of information and decision making using workflow modeling methods. Through case studies and exercises students gain insights into the elements of successful implementations leading to the preparation of a change management plan. Emphasis is placed on developing mechanisms for communicating and training all affected agents. PREREQUISITE(S): IS 430 or PM 430 or five or more other SoC MS level courses should contact the course instructor or an advisor.

PM 577
IT PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT AND STRATEGIES
Graduate
This capstone course integrates the skills and techniques learned in previous IT Project Management courses. Through in depth analysis of case studies and readings, along with presentations by outside speakers experienced in IT Portfolio Management and IT strategy, students use their skills from previous IT project management courses to solve IT strategic and IT portfolio problems. The course starts with formulating the IT strategy from the corporate strategy. Then the IT Portfolio of initiatives, projects and assets is build and fine tuned. PREREQUISITE(S) IS 556 or PM 556

PPS 200
INTRODUCTION TO PUBLIC POLICY
Undergraduate
This core course is designed to provide the student with an introduction to the field of public policy. The historical origins of policy analysis, definitions of what constitutes "public policy", various theoretical approaches developed to address policy problems, and contemporary policy debates on various substantive issues. By the end of the course each student has a solid background for further study of public policy and the social sciences. This course should be taken as one of the first courses in the major.

PPS 201
PUBLIC POLICY AND URBAN ISSUES
Undergraduate
This core course is designed to introduce students to the study of urban areas, to some of the more exciting and difficult issues faced by cities, and finally, to some of the policies designed to address these issues. Readings assist students in exploring what makes cities function, how they have changed over time and what it was like to live through those changes, can show us how modern ways of seeing and modern ways of making sense came into being. If student is a PPS major, then students are encouraged to take PPS 200 prior to PPS 201.

PPS 202
PUBLIC POLICY AND ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES
Undergraduate
This core course reviews the environmental public policy issues in the United States. The history of the modern environmental movement and the impact it continues to have on public policy is explored. Students apply concepts of environmental policy and move towards proposing policy solutions. If student is a PPS major, then students are encouraged to take PPS 200.

PPS 205
PUBLIC POLICY RESEARCH METHODS
Undergraduate
This core course provides students an understanding of and some experience with the qualitative and quantitative research methods used in public policy for collecting and identifying relevant data. Policy analysis, policy arguments, and policy making use of data to identify public problems, identify possible policies for public problems, and support arguments for specific policy alternatives. The credibility and quality of policy analyses and arguments depends in large part on the validity and reliability of that information.

PPS 206
QUANTITATIVE PUBLIC POLICY ANALYSIS
Undergraduate
This course focuses on writing of research questions and hypotheses, selection of appropriate quantitative statistical analyses for research questions, interpretation of statistical results, and communication of those results. A significant portion of the course work will involve doing statistical analyses of existing data using Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS) in the computer lab. Students will prepare a substantial paper using the techniques for public policy analysis learned in class. Students majoring in PPS are strongly encouraged to have completed PPS 205 before taking this course. This core course for PPS majors and minors should be taken before the senior year. Formerly PPS 204.

PPS 250
ISSUES IN NEIGHBORHOOD DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
A major focus of urban policy and grassroots action is the condition of city neighborhoods. This course examines trends in urban policy as they have affected neighborhoods, neighborhood-grounded grassroots action, and local neighborhood development initiatives.

PPS 251
URBAN POVERTY
Undergraduate
This course examines the demographics of poverty and its concentration in central cities. In addition, definitions of poverty and public policies aimed at alleviating poverty are explored with the aim of understanding why poverty remains prevalent in the United States.

PPS 252
PUBLIC POLICY IN COMPARATIVE HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE
Undergraduate
This course examines the origins and evolution of urban public policy in the United States and other countries. Substantive emphases include city planning measures, urban redevelopment, health and environmental measures, as well as various social policies.
PPS 253
THE CINEMATIC CITY
Undergraduate
This course examines the relationship between the city and cinema and explores how the city both real and ideal is represented in film. Covering a diverse selection of films, genres, and historical periods, the course critically explores the relationship between urban forms and cinematic representations.

PPS 254
SCREENING SUBURBIA
Undergraduate
The course explores how suburbia was represented in cinema since the post-war period. Covering diverse selection of films and genre, the course examines how domesticity, family life, gender roles, race, suburbanization, domestic space and architecture have been in cinematic space. Drawing on historical and contemporary sources, the course places suburbia at the center stage and examines the relationship between cinema and suburban ideals and how cinema as a particular mode of representation has sought to address suburbia as a particular American social and cultural landscape.

PPS 255
CITIES, GLOBALIZATION AND PUBLIC POLICY
Undergraduate
The course will examine the process of globalization on cities and its policy implication. In particular, the course will explore how the impact of globalization on cities may be evaluated; what benefits or problems they produce and for whom. It will conclude by looking at how public policy professionals can influence these results.

PPS 300
APPLIED URBAN AND ENVIRONMENTAL ECONOMICS
Undergraduate
The purpose of this core course is to provide students with a foundation in microeconomic analytical tools through which to analyze urban and environmental policy issues. This course is intended to be participatory and applied. A variety of public policy issues are examined in terms of microeconomic theory and application.

PPS 301
PUBLIC POLICY AND THE POLITICAL PROCESS
Undergraduate
Policy decisions almost inevitably involve politics. This core course explores the politics of the urban political machines that dominated politics in many cities for a long time, though some might argue that they actually had few policy interests other than to remain in power. The course examines how power is distributed in cities, and how it is used to get at the various problems confronting cities. That is, how politics affects policy. The course studies the players in the game of policy formation, and the policy process itself. While the focus may be on cities, make no mistake, politics impacts environmental policy decisions and the process of making those decisions as well.

PPS 302
IMPLEMENTATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL AND URBAN POLICY
Undergraduate
This course examines how organizational cultures affect decision making. The course focuses on bureaucratic decision making routines, the implementation of policy, and the factors which advance or constrain effectiveness in urban and environmental settings. The course also explores the utility of various communication strategies and techniques in executing policies.

PPS 303
PUBLIC POLICY AND LEADERSHIP
Undergraduate
This course analyzes modes of leadership within the context of public policy formulation and implementation. The policy-making process in post-industrial democracies will be discussed from bureaucratic, grassroots, and electoral standpoints, emphasizing the challenges for civic and community leadership that emerge from negotiating competing interests in policy outcomes.
PPS 324
PUBLIC POLICY AND NATURAL RESOURCES
Undergraduate
This course considers the present policies underlying the designation and management of national parks, national forests, wetlands, and other public lands and regulating the use, conservation, and preservation of land, mineral, timber, and water resources. Students will discuss the need for and evolution of public policies to regulate mining, fishing, timbering, and the use of water for generating electricity, irrigation, and recreation, as well as the strengths and limitations of these policies.

PPS 329
TOPICS IN ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES
Undergraduate
This course provides an in-depth examination of various environmental studies issues.

PPS 330
SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
Sustainable development has become a crucial concept in international initiatives worldwide. It attempts to foster policies that balance the need for economic development with practices that promote healthy communities and ecosystems. This course is based on the instructor's theoretical and practical experience gathered in developed and developing countries under market and command economies conditions. Special emphasis is placed on the role of institutions, both governmental and non-government, in shaping economic policies that are compatible with environmental health. The course pursues the objective of preparing students to understand main environmental problems and to generate solutions for these problems from a multidisciplinary perspective.

PPS 331
ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE
Undergraduate
The purpose of this course is to provide students with a historical background on environmental justice (EJ) in the US and an understanding of the current EJ movement. Policy debates surrounding EJ are highlighted from recent studies on determining 'disproportionate impact' to local EJ communities. In addition, students will experience the challenges of EJ organizations in Chicago through the service-based leaning component of the course. Twenty-five hours of service learning is required for completion of this course.

PPS 332
NATIONAL PARKS POLICY AND GOVERNANCE
Undergraduate
This course focuses on the interrelationship between public policy, human values, and nature as displayed through environmental policy governing our national parks. Special attention is given to the cultural dynamics (including political and legal) that are demonstrated in how public policies have been created and implemented over time in regards to our national parks. The course reviews the policy literature and theories associated with the management of the national parks as it reflects our societal values of the time period. These policies have dramatically changed over time, so it is an ideal venue that demonstrates a significant change in how we view nature. The role of tourism, economic development pressures and property owners ( takings) concerns will be included. Also, critical thinking about national parks policy will be required. This is taught as a hybrid course.

PPS 333
GREEN CITIES
Undergraduate
This course looks at public policies pertaining to urban sustainability. Low-carbon transportation, green building policies, locally produced renewable energy, and storm water management policies are among the topics discussed.

PPS 334
SUSTAINABLE LAND REVITALIZATION AND BROWNFIELDS REDEVELOPMENT PROJECT
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to environmental public policy issues associated with Brownfields, Superfund sites, and an assortment of state and local land revitalization programs. Substantive emphasis includes examination of social problems and public policy impediments associated with the revitalization of neighborhoods.
PPS 340
DYNAMICS OF PUBLIC POLICY
Undergraduate
Competing theories of policy formulation and the application of these theories to current policy contexts. Problems of policy implementation will be considered. Cross-listed with PSC 320.

PPS 350
CRITICAL ISSUES IN URBAN DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
The course examines the central issues in contemporary urban development: how urban restructuring, demographic shifts, new patterns of production and consumption, as well as technologically-grounded globalization processes, shape urban development. The course emphasizes the changing context of urban development policy and explores various critical approaches to interpreting urban development policy.

PPS 351
THE POLICY AND POLITICS OF URBAN HOUSING
Undergraduate
The course looks at housing as a social symbol and material commodity, with particular emphasis placed on the role of government in the direct provision of housing and the indirect support of home ownership, as well as housing policies indirect impact on neighborhood development, race relations, and metropolitan surburbanization.

PPS 352
ISSUES IN URBAN EDUCATIONAL POLICY
Undergraduate
This course examines the politics, history, and social context of urban education. Special attention is devoted to emerging policy alternatives such as the use of school vouchers and the formation of charter schools.

PPS 359
TOPICS IN URBAN STUDIES
Undergraduate
This course provides an in-depth examination of various urban studies issues.

PPS 393
CAPSTONE: GENTRIFICATION
Undergraduate
This course is designed to bring together much of the knowledge attained by Public Policy students during their four years at DePaul by focusing on the often contentious issues of urban gentrification and re-gentrification. Gentrification involves economic issues, political issues, environmental issues, educational issues, race and ethnicity, and equity issues as well. The course shall examine the variables associated with the process of gentrification, the advantages and disadvantages of that process, the winners and the losers in the process, and the political and economic implications of all of this.

PPS 204 and status as a Public Policy Studies major with Senior standing are a prerequisite for this class.

PPS 394
CAPSTONE: GREEN INFRASTRUCTURE
Undergraduate
This course is designed to integrate the two concentrations of the Public Policy major to address sustainable management of essential urban infrastructure systems, including stormwater management, energy production and efficiency, and urban forests. The course shall examine how municipal green infrastructure investment reflects larger social values and encourages students to examine the social forces that impact the efficacy of green infrastructure.

PPS 206 and status as a Public Policy Studies major with Senior standing are a prerequisite for this class.

PPS 397
TRAVEL/STUDY
Undergraduate Travel/Study
PRAD 244
PRINCIPLES OF ADVERTISING
Undergraduate
This course is designed to be a comprehensive introduction to the principles and practices of advertising. The course will cover topics such as ad agency structure, roles in an agency, types of advertising from TV to mobile, advertising’s role in marketing, brand strategy, market research, creative development and copywriting, media planning and buying.

PRAD 255
PUBLIC RELATIONS
Undergraduate
The foundational course in the public relations/advertising track traces the development of the public relations industry and practices. Students are introduced to theories and principles in public relations along with the roles and responsibilities of professionals working in the public relations discipline. Students examine industry regulations, societal implications, and strategic planning processes associated with public relations campaign and programs.

PRAD 256
WRITING FOR PUBLIC RELATIONS AND ADVERTISING
Undergraduate
This class provides students the opportunity to apply Public Relations/Advertising theories and principles to the development of media materials. The course familiarizes students with various forms of persuasive writing and requires them to develop a writing portfolio that demonstrates their ability to write for diverse audiences. Assignments include campaign plans, news media kits, speeches, video scripts and more.

PRAD 244 or PRAD 255 is a prerequisite for this class.

PRAD 290
PUBLIC RELATIONS AND ADVERTISING WORKSHOP (VARIABLE TOPICS)
Undergraduate
This course allows students to sample a range of hands on, practical offerings in public relations and advertising that can enhance their knowledge and expertise. Workshop topics can include SEO/SEM, media sales and buying, focus group moderating, and Adobe Creative Suite (InDesign, Photoshop, Illustrator), among others. Students may take a maximum of 4 courses of PRAD 290 in the major, and a total of 8 credit hours.

PRAD 291
RESEARCH METHODS FOR THE PRAD PROFESSIONAL
Undergraduate
Research is critical to any advertising or public relations campaign. This course introduces students to the uses and applications of research in the fields of public relations and advertising. The goal is to provide future practitioners with information needed to commission and apply research to their work problems in the industry. Students will learn to recognize valid and reliable research and to utilize this data in decision making for their agencies or clients. Students will learn to form appropriate questions, select and develop appropriate methods (qualitative and quantitative), and analyze the data for unique consumer insights. Students learn to develop research that ensures messages are able to meet the strategic needs of their clients and agencies. Students cannot earn credit for both CMNS291 and PRAD291.

PRAD 244 or PRAD 255 is a prerequisite for this class.
PRAD 292
DESIGN APPLICATIONS FOR PRAD PROFESSIONALS
Undergraduate
This course will focus on developing a primary skill-set and a basic technical proficiency using the industry-standard creative design software applications for Advertising and Public Relations. The course will provide an instructional overview of the capabilities and functionality of Adobe Photoshop, Illustrator and InDesign, combined with hands-on labs that will parlay those ideas into practical application. Topics will demonstrate how the Adobe Creative Suite software can be used for creating logos, advertisements, brochures, and other digital imaging media used in Advertising and Public Relations.
PRAD 244 or PRAD 255 is a prerequisite for this class.

PRAD 320
EVENT PLANNING
Undergraduate
This course aims to provide students with the occupational, technical and interpersonal skills necessary to "survive and thrive" in the special event industry. In addition to specific content knowledge, students will develop cross-cultural awareness, global understanding and communication skills as they relate to the event industry as a whole. The course will prepare students for a variety of options: pursuit of employment in the special events industry, professional development for those already employed in the field and general knowledge for those interested in the special events field. The purpose of this course is to acquire an in-depth knowledge about the specialized field of event planning, and to become familiar with management techniques and strategies required for successful planning, promotion, implementation and evaluation of special events.
PRAD 244 or PRAD 255 is a prerequisite for this class.

PRAD 323
ADVERTISING SALES
Undergraduate
This course familiarizes students with the process of advertising & media sales. Coursework will include sales call preparation and prospecting, preparing a sales pitch, the power of active listening and how to ask the right questions during a sales call. We'll discuss tips for organizing business leads and clients, managing sales funnels and territories from a financial standpoint, the importance of networking and client service and best practices for negotiating and closing the deal. Graduate Building on the work of the winter quarter, students will use their enhanced partner attention skills in order to focus on the second half of Meisner's definition of acting: "living truthfully under imaginary circumstances." Each exercise in the progression is designed to expand the actor's ability to imagine and personalize circumstances that are meaningful to them. We will also explore what the student needs to do to be ready for the first moment of a scene or play: Emotional Preparation. Finally, actors will learn how to carry over what they have learned into a scripted scene.

MFA MAKEUP
Graduate
MFA Makeup is a quarter-long course designed to give the graduate actor facility in conceiving and creating the makeup for a given character he or she might have to portray on stage. The goal of the course is to demystify the art of makeup by doing ten weeks of character development, visual research and hands on painting that will produce a basic level of comfort with makeup techniques. Basic light and shade sculpting will be reviewed. Aging the face, making the face look younger, white face techniques, trauma, animal techniques, and non-realistic makeups will be explored and applied to the various theatre sizes we encounter here at DePaul as well as in stages all over Chicago.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 595
SOLO PERFORMANCE WORKSHOP
Graduate
Designed for advanced BFA and MFA acting students, Solo Performance Workshop offers students the opportunity to conceive, create and develop original solo works through writing exercises, structured improvisation, character creation and formal experiments. At the end of the quarter, students share their works-in-progress with the TTS community.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
PRF 596
ADVANCED STAGE COMBAT
Graduate
An advanced movement class which, as an elective, builds new skills and furthers proficiency gained in the required Stage Combat class. Realistically portraying violence while remaining safe, good partnering, balance, and coordination are some of the movement skills that are honed through this course. Work continues on perfecting techniques and performance in Rapier-and-Dagger and Unarmed combat. Students may take this course more than once as a different third weapon (either knife, smallsword, quarterstaff, or broadsword) is added to the course-work each quarter. The students have the option to have their final scene-work adjudicated by a Fight Master from The Society of American Fight Directors, which, if successful, offers the opportunity to become a recognized "Actor-Combatant" with that institution. Entrance into class is competitive and is partially decided in accordance with discipline shown in the earlier course.

GRADUATE ACTING II: CLASSICAL
Graduate
The goal of this year-long course in Heightened Text/Classical Acting is to join the emotional, physical and imaginative life of a role with the technical skills needed to express that character to its fullest. This is achieved through rigorous foundation work and applying the basic tenets of acting to the acting of plays in verse; making strong choices that are grounded in the text, establishing a connection to the scene partner, listening and responding to what is happening in the scene, and integrating the work done in other voice, speech and movement classes.

PRF 612
GRADUATE ACTING II: CLASSICAL
Graduate
In winter quarter, students work with dramatic monologues, explore and study Shakespeare's prose and scenes from the Jacobean playwrights John Webster, John Ford and Thomas Middleton. Though prose lacks meter, it has its own rhythm, in part defined by punctuation and rhetorical shape. Finding that rhythm of thought is essential to the clarity and life of the prose. With prose, as with meter, rhetoric, and imagery, we approach the work through both brain and body: balancing analytical and physical techniques for understanding and harnessing the dynamics of Shakespeare's language.

PRF 611 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
The spring quarter will focus on comedies by Shakespeare, Moliere, Sheridan, Wilde and Coward. Students will call upon all of the truth-seeking, risk-taking and relish-making that comedy and heightened language requires. Only farce and commedia are larger. The resulting agility with text provides a firm foundation for confident performance of all classical and modern roles. Exploration of Shakespeare's comedies will include collaboration with M.F.A. Directors with scenes to be presented as an invited-audience showing.

THE DIRECTOR AND THE NEW PLAY DEVELOPMENT PROCESS
Graduate
This course is offered every other year and explores the director's role in the development of new plays. MFA Directors work with professional playwrights on new work. Directors are introduced to the many ways they may be charged with presenting new work, including table readings, staged readings, workshops, designed workshops and world premieres. Over the course of the quarter, directors rehearse and present one sit-down reading and one staged reading. Additionally, students rehearse and present a staged reading in a professional situation.

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

GRADUATE MOVEMENT II
Graduate
Movement work focused on the exploration of effort/shape and how to function within the boundaries of form. Period dances, manners, and clothing will be explored and the creation of specific worlds (styles) will be emphasized.

GRADUATE ACTING II: MYTH, FABLE, & FOLKLORE IN DRAMA
Graduate
This course explores the world of archetype, performance and magic in drama across boundaries of time and tradition. Inspired by folktales, myths, oral poetry and rituals from many traditions, the students develop original and play-based theatrical work both solo and ensemble. Resources include the traditional stories of African, Asian, South American, European and American literature, as well as plays from modernity that explore a mythic or folkloric basis.

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 642
GRADUATE ACTING II: TRAGIC FOCUS FROM 1700 TO 1950

ADVANCED STAGE COMBAT
Graduate
In this course students will continue their study of unarmed and rapier-&-dagger techniques, as well as adding a third weapon discipline as taught by The Society of American Fight Directors (past options have included knife, broadsword, quarterstaff, small sword) for use in stage and film performance. The students will perform choreography in all three disciplines, in scenes which they themselves select but which are choreographed by the instructor. The students are then given the opportunity to take the SAFD’s Skills Proficiency Test for all three weapons, with an outside adjudicator, in the hope of reaching ‘Actor Combatant’ status within the SAFD.

DIRECTING SEMINAR
Graduate
This course provides the opportunity for all three years of MFA directors and directing faculty to share, discuss and investigate particular and immediate aspects of directing. The course provides a forum for directors to discuss current rehearsal processes and trouble-shoot with their colleagues and instructor. Additionally, directing students reflect on, discuss and receive feedback from their colleagues and instructor on production work. The second half of the course focuses on honing a specific directorial skill or exploring new directorial territory. This component changes quarterly at the discretion of the instructor.

GRADUATE ACTING III: COMPANY CREATION
Graduate
This course is a journey with toolbox through creating and producing ensemble-based theater. Students follow two pathways: creating theater and producing theater. The path of creating follows on the self-generated work of MFA I and II Workshops, empowering the class to imagine and rehearse an original piece of theater through an invented process. Weekly rehearsal meetings build the piece into a “producer’s rehearsal” at the end of the quarter. The path of producing introduces the class to tools necessary for mounting theater in Chicago or elsewhere. Using the piece under construction as their example, the students delegate and coordinate work on mission statement, company structure/contracts, by-laws, board formation, not-for-profit/tax-exempt status, grant writing, fundraising, space rental, rehearsal process, press relations, advertising, audience development, festivals, transfers, documentation, and touring.

PRF 613 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
PRF 712
GRADUATE ACTING III: PROFESSIONAL PREPARATION
Graduate
This course follows on the Audition class from fall quarter bringing the students into simulated auditions for weekly guests including professional casting directors, casting agents, talent managers, artistic directors, and filmmakers from Chicago and beyond. Feedback will focus on empowering the actors to strengthen their approach, courage, effectiveness and flexibility in the casting process as felt in the "real world."

PRF 711 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 713
GRADUATE ACTING III: ADVANCED IMPROVISATION
Graduate
This intensive course capstones the impulse work and Spolin-based work from MFA I Improvisation by updating the class to improvisational forms that extend beyond scenic and sketch. Mining the rich and still-unfolding history of Chicago improvisation, students flex their creative muscles by exploring long-form improvisational models and unique multi-scenic structures.

PRF 712 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 714
AUDITION
Graduate
This studio-based class introduces the student to multiple forms of audition practiced in professional theater as well as those forms practiced in film, television, and commercials. Students train rigorously with monologues, cold readings, callback scenes, copy reading, and reader-style auditions in weekly class simulations. The course will cover methods for researching and attending auditions, finding and preparing suitable material, as well as handling the audition process professionally and successfully. Discussions of "type," "color-blind casting," manager/agent relationships, and ethical concerns of auditions will be included.

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 716
GRADUATE SHOWCASE
Graduate
Through the rehearsal process, graduate acting majors prepare monologues and scenes, culminating ultimately in a showcase for an invited audience of casting directors, agents, and directors.

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 720
ACTING FOR THE CAMERA
Graduate
"Film acting" prepares the student for the professional world in front of the camera. Working in front of the camera(s), the student learns the different techniques between stage and film techniques and the differences, between soaps, sitcoms, commercials, and features. The student is also exposed to life on the set, contracts, agents, managers and steps to finding work. This class is a bridge for the student from the classroom to the professional world.

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 721
GRADUATE MOVEMENT III
Graduate
The technique of movement to music will be used to: stimulate the actor's imagination, experiment with the identification, translation, and articulation of creative impulses, intensify ensemble work, expand the range of expression and strengthen and condition the body.

GRADUATE MOVEMENT III: PILATES
Graduate

This is a finishing level movement class that is taught by certified instructors at a nearby studio. Working on Pilates equipment ("reformers", etc.), this class offers the student a chance to further learn about efficient patterns of motion while creating an evenly conditioned body. Pilates helps the student develop strong core muscles and build strength without "bulking up". This class will draw upon the student's previous movement classes by challenging their awareness, levels of inquiry and physical decisions in a non-theatrical movement class.

PRF 722 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 730
MFA III VOICE & SPEECH
Graduate

This advanced voice and speech class will focus on the individual needs of the participating students. Students can expect a range of lessons designed to explore voice/body connections using monologues and scenes.

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PSC 120
THE AMERICAN POLITICAL SYSTEM
Undergraduate
A survey of the national political system, including discussions of the political beliefs and behavior of citizens, the constitutional structure, and national political processes.

PSC 140
INTRODUCTION TO INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS
Undergraduate
Three main themes are dealt with: the nature of power in the international political system, conflict and conflict resolution in the system, and the basis of national foreign policy decisions. Issues of current importance, such as the likelihood of global war, conflict between rich and poor nations, and East-West relations, provide the substantive material to illuminate these main themes.

PSC 150
INTRODUCTION TO COMPARATIVE POLITICS
Undergraduate
This course focuses on the way in which political systems other than that of the United States operate. The common features of governments are identified and examined with special attention to such topics as political elites, political institutions, mass political behavior, political change and revolution. Examples are drawn from a wide range of political systems.

PSC 201
GEOGRAPHIC INFORMATION SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
An introductory-level course covering the fundamentals of Geographic Information Systems (GIS). Topics include GPS, remote sensing, data models (vector and raster), coordinate systems, and map design. Instruction is accomplished through lectures and hands-on computer lab exercises using ArcGIS. Cross listed with GEO 241.

LSP 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PSC 205
STATISTICS FOR THE SOCIAL SCIENCES
Undergraduate
Data description and interpretation; table construction; correlation, regression and ANOVA; introduction to multivariate analysis; statistical inference and hypothesis testing. Cross-listed with SOC 279.

MAT 100 or higher or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

PSC 213
POLITICAL SOCIALIZATION
Undergraduate
This course considers the social institutions important for the political development of individuals. The political significance of institutions such as the family, the school and the work place will be examined. (Please note that the catalog number for this course was changed from PSC 219 to PSC 213 effective Autumn, 2001)

PSC 214
POLITICS AND MULTICULTURALISM
Undergraduate
This course examines the theoretical and practical dilemmas facing multicultural societies, with special emphasis on the United States. Special attention is paid to questions of identity, integration, and separatism.

PSC 216
AMERICAN POLITICAL CULTURE
Undergraduate
An examination of the shared symbol systems that provide meaning and structure for political life. Key historic cultural concepts, such as individualism, materialism and mobility will be considered, and their connections to contemporary popular culture explored.
PSC 217
WOMEN AND POLITICS
Undergraduate
This course explores the ways in which women interpret, gain access to, and use political power. It focuses on sex- and gender-based differences in the political socialization process, and their implications for the participation and organization of women. Gender-related legislation and "women's" political issues are also evaluated. Particular attention is given to women and politics in the United States.

PSC 218
AFRICAN-AMERICAN POLITICS
Undergraduate
This course discusses the nature and scope of African-American politics. Major topics include the radical, liberal, moderate and conservative wings of African-American political discourse, the civil rights movement and its aftermath, the rise of African-American mayors, and presidential politics. An historical survey of African-American politics, and the factors that have shaped them, may also be included.

PSC 219
TOPICS IN POLITICAL CULTURE
Undergraduate
The course focuses on specific themes or concerns in politics and culture. Variable topics.

PSC 220

Basic knowledge of program development, program evaluation, consultation, human diversity, ethics, group dynamics, and interpersonal skills.

PSY 105 or 106 and PSY 354 are prerequisites for this class, and admission into the community psychology concentration.

PSY 357
APPLIED PSYCHOLOGY I
Undergraduate
Overview of behavioral principles, strategies, and system approaches to individual, organizational, and community change. Generally taken in junior year.

PSY 358
APPLIED PSYCHOLOGY II
Undergraduate
Approaches to counseling, psychotherapy and helping relationships. Generally taken in junior year.

PSY 359
FIELD WORK IN COMMUNITY RESEARCH AND ACTION
Undergraduate
Field work in community research and action.

PSY 356 and senior standing are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 360
THEORIES OF LEARNING AND COGNITION
Undergraduate
Explores classical and modern theories and research in the science of learning and cognition.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 361
HISTORY AND SYSTEMS OF PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Historical development of psychology and its fields. Cross-level with PSY 461.

(PSY 105 or 106), (PSY 240 or equivalents), PSY 241 and PSY 242 are a prerequisite for this class.
PSY 362
SEMINAR IN COGNITION
Undergraduate
Consideration of a current important topic area in cognitive psychology. Cross-level with PSY 563.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 363
ALCOHOLISM, DRUG ADDICTION AND RECOVERY
Undergraduate
Survey of major research findings in the area of alcoholism and drug addiction. Description of treatment programs for recovery and explorations of drug free ways to alter consciousness.

PSY 105, PSY 106 or the equivalent of Introduction to Psychology is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 364
HEALTH PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course provides an overview of such topics as psychosocial factors in disease etiology, health behaviors and behavior change, stress and coping, adjustment to illness, social relationships and health, mind-body interactions and intervention, and patient-provider interaction.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 366
BEHAVIOR PROBLEMS OF CHILDREN
Undergraduate
Factors associated with deviance in children and adolescents. Examination of personal and social consequences. Review treatment programs for children.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 367
PSYCHOLOGY OF EXCEPTIONAL CHILDREN
Undergraduate

PSY 105 or 106 and PSY 333 are prerequisites for this class.

PSY 372
RESEARCH METHODS IN SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Overview of methods and associated problems unique to conducting research with humans both in the laboratory and the field.

PSY 347 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 373
HAPPINESS, JUDGMENT AND DECISION MAKING
Undergraduate

PSY 105 or PSY 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 375
SENSATION AND PERCEPTION
Undergraduate
The physiology of sensory systems and the psychological mechanisms of perception.

(PSY 105 or PSY 106) and PSY 242 are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 377
PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Nervous system and endocrine functions as related to behavior.

(PSY 105 or PSY 106), PSY 240, and PSY 242 are prerequisites for this class.

PSY 378
COMPARATIVE PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Patterns of behavior shown by various animal species. Cross-listed with PSY 554.

(PSY 105 or PSY 106) and PSY 242 are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 379
COGNITIVE NEUROSCIENCE
Undergraduate
This course explores the neuroscience of human behaviors such as emotions, attention, executive function, language, learning, memory, and social interaction by exploring both the underlying biological mechanisms and the psychological theories behind these behaviors. Cognitive Neuroscience is an emerging field of study that attempts to help one gain an understanding of the interdisciplinary nature of the human mind.

PSY 380
INDUSTRIAL AND ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Application of theories and methods of psychology to the study of human behavior in business, industry, and other organizations. Cross-listed with PSY 680.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.
PSY 381
PERSONNEL PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Application of concepts from differential psychology and measurement to employee selection, performance appraisal, placement and training in business and other organizations.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 382
ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAVIOR
Undergraduate
Theories in learning, personality, work motivation, job attitudes, and organizational culture, and application to employee behavior.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 385
TRAINING AND DEVELOPMENT IN ORGANIZATIONS
Undergraduate
Issues related to training in industry and other organizations. Such topics as needs assessment, training program design, and program evaluation will be covered, along with relevant ethical, social and economic issues.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 388
TOPICAL SEMINAR IN INDUSTRIAL - ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Current topics and issues in I-O Psychology beyond the introductory course with particular emphasis on recent developments and research. Topics vary.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 390
INDEPENDENT RESEARCH IN PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Independent Research in Psychology. Student will work with a faculty mentor to develop an individualized plan of work involving some aspect of research. This can include, but is not limited to, reviewing literature, developing a research project, collecting data on an ongoing project, coding or analyzing data, developing a research presentation, or working in the community on research or intervention projects. Students taking the course for 4 or more units must produce a graded project at the end of the quarter.

PSY 392
PSYCHOLOGY OF ALIENATION
Undergraduate
Causes of individual and group alienation, and the resultant behavior.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 393
PSYCHOLINGUISTICS
Undergraduate
Applications of linguistic theory and the psychology of language. Cross-listed with MOL 356.

PSY 394
ADVANCED TOPICS IN PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Senior standing is a prerequisite for this class.
PSY 395
FIELD WORK/INTERNSHIP
Undergraduate
Supervised experience in selected off-campus settings and associated readings. Generally taken in senior year.

PSY 396 and PSY 358 are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 396
HONORS IN PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Attendance at monthly Honors Seminar is required. Honors thesis is completed during the student's senior year. Can be registered for more than once.

Senior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 397
EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING/PSYCHOLOGY RESEARCH
Undergraduate
Experiential Learning/Psychology Research.

PSY 398
TUTORING AND MENTORING IN PSYCHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Senior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
PSY 402
PERCEPTUAL PROCESSES
Graduate
Analysis of the variables involved in the determination of perception with particular attention to the problems of space, motion, distance, size, form, aftereffects and constancies.

PSY 404
LEARNING AND COGNITIVE PROCESSES
Graduate
Survey of classical and instrumental conditioning, biological constraints, attention, memory, cognition, and practical applications. Major theoretical approaches include stimulus-response, early cognitive theories and information processing theory.

PSY 406
PHYSIOLOGICAL PROCESSES
Graduate
The functional role of neural systems important for the processes of motivation, emotion, sleep, memory, and cognition.

PSY 409
STATISTICS FOR THE BEHAVIORAL SCIENCES
Graduate
Applied inferential statistics.

PSY 240 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 410
ADVANCED STATISTICS I
Graduate
Brief review of introductory statistics, followed by a focus on Analysis of Variance and related techniques for data analysis. One way, factorial, repeated measures and ANCOVA with a priori and post hoc tests. Nonparametric alternatives to mean-comparison tests.
PSY 411
ADVANCED STATISTICS II
Graduate
Multiple linear regression, analysis of covariance, and logistic regression.

PSY 410 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 412
ADVANCED STATISTICS III
Graduate
Advanced Statistics III

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 413
ANALYSIS OF LONGITUDINAL DATA
Graduate
Analysis of changes and time-dependent data.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 414
CATEGORICAL DATA ANALYSIS
Graduate
Analysis of contingency tables and count data logit, probit and loglinear models.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 416
METHODS IN QUALITATIVE RESEARCH
Graduate
History and paradigms of qualitative research, the strategies and data collection methods used, and how to make sense of qualitative data once it is collected.

PSY 418
MULTIVARIATE STATISTICAL ANALYSIS
Graduate
Multivariate regression, principal component, cluster analysis and multidimensional scaling. Canonical correlation, multivariate analysis of variance, linear discriminant function analysis.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 419
FACTOR ANALYSIS AND PATH MODELING
Graduate
Theoretical foundations, methods of analysis, and comparison of various factor analytic models. Structural equation and measurement models using the Mplus/ LISREL program.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 420
QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH DESIGN
Graduate
Design and analysis of basic and applied psychological research with an emphasis on experimental and quasi-experimental design, and basic issues of measurement.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.
PSY 421
ADVANCED EXPERIMENTAL DESIGN
Graduate
None

PSY 420 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 422
COMPUTING FOR THE BEHAVIORAL SCIENTIST
Graduate
An introduction to computer programming, web development, and other computer-intensive techniques as applied to behavioral science research.

PSY 425
COGNITIVE PROCESSES
Graduate
Cognitive Processes

PSY 426
ADVANCED LANGUAGE SEMINAR: PSYCHOLOGY OF BILINGUALISM
Graduate
This course presents an introduction to how bilinguals produce and understand language by examining theoretical constructs and research in psycholinguistics. It also explores developmental and methodological issues in bilingualism research.

PSY 427
SENSORY PROCESSES
Graduate
Sensory Processes

PSY 430
ADVANCED SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Advanced study of social psychological methodology, ethics and deception, attitudes, altruism, aggression, and interpersonal processes and attraction.

PSY 432
ATTITUDE ANALYSIS
Graduate
Theory and research in attitude formation and organization, communication and persuasion, resistance to persuasion, and measurement techniques.

PSY 433
SOCIAL JUDGMENT
Graduate
Theory and research in judgment of social stimuli, perceiving and evaluating persons, and social comparison processes.

PSY 434
SMALL GROUP BEHAVIOR
Graduate
Theory and research in goal formation, conformity, power and communication structures, cohesion, and task performance. The emphasis is on the behavior of persons within groups.
PSY 435
PSYCHOLOGY OF INTERPERSONAL RELATIONSHIPS
Graduate
Theory and research on selected aspects of close relationships. Cross-level with PSY 317.

PSY 437
ADVANCED PERSONALITY
Graduate
Critical analysis of research in personality with emphasis on the development and testability of major constructs in contemporary research.

PSY 439
ADVANCED DEVELOPMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Current research and theories in child development relating to the preschool child, elementary school child, and adolescent. Emphasis on cognitive, language, and social/emotional development.

PSY 440
PSYCHOLOGY OF WORK AND MOTIVATION
Graduate
Current research and theories in organizational psychology relating to motivation, job satisfaction, work attitudes, employee withdrawal, and counterproductivity.
PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 441
PSYCHOLOGY OF LEADERSHIP
Graduate
Current research and theories in organizational psychology relating to leadership, supervision, job performance, and managerial training. Emphasis is on theoretical development and empirical evaluation of constructs in contemporary research.
PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 442
PERSONNEL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Major issues in the Human Resource area. Topics include job analysis, job evaluation, pay equity, benefits, incentive systems, and personnel selection methods, focusing on recruitment, biodata, references, testing, interviews.
PSY 448 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 443
PSYCHOLOGY OF DESIGN
Graduate
This course helps students understand how theoretical principles of psychology can be applied to the design of human-centered organizations, environments and technologies. Prior familiarity with psychology and experimental design is strongly recommended. Cross-level with PSY 383.
PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 444
PERFORMANCE APPRAISAL
Graduate
Theory of criterion development, the evaluation process, and measurement in performance appraisal. Emphasis on design and development.
PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.
PSY 445
ADVANCED TRAINING AND DEVELOPMENT IN ORGANIZATIONS
Graduate
In-depth exposure to issues related to training in industry and other organizations. Such topics as needs assessment, training program design, program evaluation, and relevant social and economic issues will be covered.

PSY 446
PSYCHOLOGICAL THEORIES OF ORGANIZATIONS
Graduate
Theory and research in the psychology of organizations relating to organizational design, analysis, systems, processes and change.

PSY 447
ORGANIZATIONAL CONSULTATION
Graduate
Applies behavioral science and managerial theories and methodologies to organizational consultation and change processes.

PSY 448
CONCEPTS, METHODS, AND ETHICS FOR INDUSTRIAL/ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
The major concepts and techniques relevant to I/O psychology. Topics include psychometrics, regression, validity generalization, utility, legal issues, affirmative action, and ethics.

PSY 450
PSYCHOLOGICAL MEASUREMENT
Graduate
Logical and mathematical principles underlying test construction with emphasis on evaluating the reliability and validity of scores.

PSY 451
APPLIED STATISTICAL PREDICTION
Graduate
Applications of statistics and psychological measurement to the problems of predicting human performance. Several computer programs will be used to analyze data.

PSY 454
BEHAVIOR MODIFICATION
Graduate
Analysis of principles, practices and research related to learning theory and the modification of human behavior.

PSY 461
HISTORY AND SYSTEMS OF PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
A review of the history of modern psychology, including various theoretical systems. Topics covered will include contributions of important leaders in the field, specific trends throughout the history of psychology, and the major philosophical questions underlying psychological science. Cross-level with PSY 361.

PSY 469
EMOTIONS AND EMOTIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Emotions And Emotional Development
PSY 473
THE PSYCHOLOGY OF JUDGMENT AND DECISION-MAKING
Graduate

PSY 481
INDIVIDUAL INTELLIGENCE TESTING I
Graduate
Theories of intelligence and cognitive development. Introduction to the administration of verbal and various nonverbal tests including the Stanford Binet, Wechsler Intelligence Scale for Children and Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale and the clinical use of these instruments.

PSY 482
PERSONALITY ASSESSMENT
Graduate
Administration and scoring of the Rorschach and Thematic Aperception Test and other tests. Evaluation of tests and related areas of research and development.

PSY 483
ADVANCED PSYCHODIAGNOSTICS
Graduate
Advanced study of projective techniques and other assessment methods, with emphasis on analysis, interpretation and integration of all pertinent clinical data, and report writing.

PSY 484
BEHAVIORAL ASSESSMENT
Graduate
Behavioral observation and recording. Self-report measures. Physiological measurement. Evaluation of behavioral measures and areas of research.

PSY 485
NEUROPSYCHOLOGICAL TESTING
Graduate
Introduction to theory and assessment techniques related to adult and child neurological functioning.

PSY 486
ADVANCED PSYCHOPATHOLOGY
Graduate
Review of the major diagnostic categories as outlined by the current Diagnostic and Statistical Manual. Current issues in psychopathology and related research are reviewed.

PSY 487
PSYCHOPATHOLOGY OF THE CHILD
Graduate
Introduction to the many categories of psychopathology affecting children and adolescents. Emphasis on the developmental and environmental contexts.

PSY 488
PRINCIPLES OF PSYCHOTHERAPY
Graduate
Analysis of theoretical approaches to psychotherapy.
PSY 489
GROUP PSYCHOTHERAPY
Graduate
Principles, theories and techniques of group psychotherapy. Problems of selection of group members and evaluation of progress.

PSY 491
TREATMENT METHODS WITH CHILDREN
Graduate
Consideration of a variety of treatment approaches used to help alleviate the psychological problems of children.

PSY 492
PRINCIPLES OF CONSULTATION
Graduate
Principles and dynamics in consulting with communities. Emphasis on collaborative and participatory approaches to consulting with communities in social change efforts, research/evaluation, organizational development, and systems issues. Gaining entree, assessing community context, and maintaining relationships with diverse community stakeholders.

PSY 493
ADVANCED COMMUNITY PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
An advanced introduction to community psychology with an emphasis on major historical and contemporary themes such as prevention of psychological problems and promotion of wellness, empowerment and social justice, community research methods, diversity in gender, ethnicity, sexual orientation and disability status, community processes, and collaboration and intervention to address social problems.

PSY 495
GRANT WRITING IN PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
This course will facilitate students' ability to transpose psychology principles and theory into practice by preparing them to be psychology entrepreneurs via the grant writing process. Understanding the child, family, language and IQ, education and learning styles, and cultural identity are all emphasized. Cross-level with PSY 346.

PSY 550
SEMINAR IN TEACHING PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
This course exposes students to major pedagogical and classroom management considerations in higher education and familiarizes students with instructional support services across the university. This year-long, cohort-based course is required for graduate students prior to becoming instructors in the department. It begins each Winter Quarter and ends Autumn Quarter. Students who enroll should expect to complete all requirements for the master's degree prior to Autumn Quarter. Zero-credit hours.

PSY 551
SEMINAR IN EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
None

PSY 552
SEMINAR IN NEUROPSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
None

PSY 553
SEMINAR IN PERSONALITY RESEARCH
Graduate
None

PSY 554
SEMINAR IN DEVELOPMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
This course focuses on special topics in developmental psychology and may cover social, emotional, language, and/or cognitive development during selected portions of the lifespan. Relevant theories and empirical research will be analyzed. Cross-level with PSY 378.

PSY 555
SOCIAL AND EMOTIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Focus on development of emotions, social relationships, and social interaction. Both theoretical perspectives and research findings are presented and analyzed. Topics covered may include: primary emotions and their development, nonverbal communication of emotions, socialization within the family, friendship and peer relations, aggression, moral development, sex role development, and attachment. Cross-level with PSY 370.

PSY 556
SEMINAR IN SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
None
PSY 557
SEMINAR IN LEARNING AND COGNITIVE PROCESSES
Graduate
Seminar in current issues in cognitive psychology.

PSY 558
SEMINAR IN ADVANCED STATISTICS
Graduate
PSY 411 and PSY 420 are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 559
SEMINAR IN INDUSTRIAL/ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Four quarter hours.

PSY 448 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 560
SOCIAL COGNITION
Graduate
Theory and research addressing major aspects of social cognition, including how people subjectively understand and mentally represent themselves and others (e.g., in terms of unique versus applicable stereotypes), and how these representations influence self-regulation, person and group perception, and social behavior.

PSY 561
ADVANCED PSYCHOLOGY OF WOMEN AND GENDER
Graduate
A review of research and theory on women, including sexist biases in traditional research, feminist methodology, pedagogy and therapy, violence against women, gender differences in development, relationships, sexuality, and the interplay of gender, race and sexual orientation. Cross-listed with MLS 478 and WGS 470.

PSY 562
SEMINAR IN FAMILY THERAPY
Graduate
A review of systems theory and the assessment and treatment of families.

PSY 563
MENTAL IMAGERY
Graduate
Theory, research and practical applications of mental imagery are considered in lecture/discussion/student-report format. Variety of imagery techniques will be reviewed which have been found useful in research and practice. Special attention devoted to the differences between subjective approaches (consciousness and vividness ratings) versus objective approaches (memory measures) of studying imagery. Cross-listed with PSY 362.

PSY 564
SEMINAR IN CLINICAL RESEARCH
Graduate
PSY 488 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 565
PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT SEMINAR
Graduate
An interactive seminar that provides guidance regarding master's thesis research, comprehensive examination or literature review, and/or dissertation plans. Attention to pathways for success in doctoral education, practica, internship, scientific research and careers. Selected topics vary with student needs and interests.

Graduate
Zero credit hours.

PSY 583
PRACTICUM IN COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH
Graduate
Zero credit hours.

PSY 584
PRACTICUM IN SPECIAL AREAS IN PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Zero credit hours.

PSY 585
FIELDWORK IN COMMUNITY SETTINGS
Graduate
An applied experience which integrates skills of consultation, program development, advocacy, and program evaluation.

PSY 586
PRACTICUM IN APPLIED INDUSTRIAL/ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Supervised experience in the application of I/O Psychology and technical report writing.

PSY 587
PRACTICUM IN ADVANCED RESEARCH IN INDUSTRIAL/ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Supervised experience in I/O research and the preparation of research results for publication.

PSY 588
TOPICS IN PSYCHOLOGICAL SCIENCE I
Graduate
Consideration of topics of current interest to the faculty and graduate students. Includes readings and discussion of important current research, discussions of professional development and presentations by invited speakers.

PSY 589
TOPICS IN PSYCHOLOGICAL SCIENCE II
Graduate
Continuation of PSY 588. Consideration of topics of current interest to the faculty and advanced graduate students.

PSY 590
THESIS SEMINAR
Graduate
Zero-credit hours.

PSY 591
COLLOQUIUM IN INDUSTRIAL/ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Required of all I/O students. Register in Fall term; continues throughout the year. Presentations on research and other topics by students, faculty, and invited speakers. Zero-credit hours.
PSY 592
DIRECTED RESEARCH
Graduate
Psychotherapy. J-Developmental. K-Industrial/Organizational. The course involves individual projects (non-thesis research) under the supervision of a faculty member. (Arranged by consultation with the chair). One to four quarter hours.

PSY 593
PRE-DOCTORAL RESEARCH
Graduate
Graduate students in specific doctoral programs are required to register for this course for at least three quarters prior to registering for Psy 598 (Dissertation Seminar) or Psy 599 (Dissertation Research). This course requires full-time (at least 8-12 hours per week) work on research under the supervision of a faculty mentor. Zero-credit hours.

PSY 594
DIRECTED READINGS IN PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
A course involving intensive readings in contemporary psychological literature. (Arranged by prior consultation with the chair). One to four quarter hours.

PSY 595
COLLOQUIUM
Graduate
Required of all graduate students each quarter until graduation. Lectures by psychologists and members of the faculty. Zero-credit hours.

PSY 596
INTERNSHIP IN CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Arranged with consent of director of clinical training. Zero-credit hours.

PSY 597
MASTER’S THESIS RESEARCH
Graduate
Original investigation of a specific research problem. Four hours required.

PSY 598
DISSERTATION RESEARCH SEMINAR
Graduate
Seminar for doctoral candidates working on their dissertation. Students will develop their proposals or write their results and discussion sections, depending on status of their dissertation research. Students will also review and critique work of other students. Zero credit hours.

PSY 599
DISSERTATION RESEARCH
Graduate
Four hours total required. One to four hours per quarter.

PSY 634
ADOLESCENT DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Focus on normal processes in adolescent development as well as risk factors for maladaptive development.

PSY 639
ADVANCED DEVELOPMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Focus on major theories and research in child development.
PSY 653
ABNORMAL PSYCHOLOGY
Graduate
Focus on the primary psychological diagnoses common today.

PSY 654

REL 251
THE IDEA OF 'EVIL'
Undergraduate
This course will try and answer the question what is evil? In religious traditions is evil a relative term? Or is it a universal absolute? Does evil exist independently, or is it a result of the absence of good? How do religious traditions deal with the notion of evil? After we look at the religious, philosophical, historical, conceptualization of evil and how different religious traditions deal with it, the class will look at evil in popular culture (anthropological understanding of evil). How does the popular imagination understand evil? How do they depict and imagine evil (in film, and in literature)? Are these universalities or are they cultural relativism? How has popular culture dealt with evil? Finally the course tries to see if there is any connection with the popular imagination and religious traditions when it comes to evil.

Undergraduate
A study of how Roman Catholicism understands and responds to other religious traditions, other ways of being religious, and how the encounter with those other traditions affects Roman Catholicism's understanding of itself and its teachings.

REL 286
PILGRIMAGE, RELIGION AND POPULAR CULTURE
Undergraduate
How has the role of pilgrimage evolved from antiquity to the present age, and how can the phenomenon of pilgrimage provide a modern window into how people define what is spiritually significant? Might the phenomenon of pilgrimage, as it is found in nearly every religious tradition, provide a common language and thus a means for building bridges across boundaries of religious difference? This course examines pilgrimage as a religious, cultural, historical and ethical phenomenon. Using methodologies developed in the study of religion, ethics, anthropology and popular culture, this course will introduce students to pilgrimage as it is practiced in expressions of Judaism, Christianity and Islam. The aim of this course is to explore some of the competing typologies and events associated with the formal study of religious ritual and then apply these learnings to modern cultural phenomena, work that will prepare students for the project of constructing their own pilgrimages.

REL 287
ROMAN CATHOLIC MORAL THOUGHT
Undergraduate
This course examines various moral topics within a Roman Catholic framework. Papal pronouncements, Magisterial statements, Episcopal texts, the works of influential theologians, and critical voices both within and beyond the Church will be critically examined. REL 311
SUSTAINABILITY AND RELIGIOUS WORLDVIEWS
Undergraduate
This course will analyze the nature of systemic change in the era of sustainability, considering the three dimensions of sustainability - social justice, economic viability, and environmental stewardship - from the perspective of one or more religious traditions, particularly the perspective of integral human development from Catholic social thought. It will use systems thinking to evaluate the economic, social, organizational, and personal contexts of promoting integral human development in a finite ecology. The course will ask students to identify a systemic change project that promotes integral human development, so that student learning is oriented toward, focused on, and expressive of their own interest relevant to a core challenge they have chosen. One key question will shape the trajectory of the course: How does one develop a systemic change project that promotes integral human development? The focus of this course is for the student to select a particular need or set of needs, to determine a sustainable way to deliver a product, service, or good, and to persuasively articulate the values and vision - personally and organizationally - driving their proposed solution. The systemic change project will also be a step toward answering some fundamental career questions: What need do I want to address that will lead to sustainable value for the organization I choose to join? How will this differentiate my organization from others? How should I understand this need in relationship to the natural world, and in relationship to my own place in the economy, in society? To address today's challenges, students must engage in new ways of thinking and new patterns of inquiry. This goal requires a new pedagogy - one that asks students to be conscious of their own assumptions, their own patterns of knowing.

REL 320

Entails either an Applied Research or Service Learning component.
REL 362
JEWS AND THEIR MESSIAHS
Undergraduate
This course will introduce students to the history of messianic beliefs in Judaism from biblical times to the present. It is often assumed that "messianism," i.e. the belief in a savior figure destined to come in the future to usher in a new age of redemption and moral goodness, has always been central to Judaism. The course will examine whether our modern concept of "messianism" can be used as a valid tool to describe Jewish religious experience. The course will also analyze the extent to which Jewish messianic beliefs varied over time by examining major messianic texts and movements in their historical, literary, and cultural contexts.

Sophomore standing is a prerequisite for this class.

REL 363

RELC 500
RELATIONAL COMMUNICATION THEORIES
Graduate
Students will gain an understanding of the different meta-theoretical frameworks used to explain relational communication as well as an understanding of what theories are and how theories are developed. A wide range of relational theories will be used in explaining what constitutes relational communication. Students will be provided with opportunities to apply theoretical concepts to everyday personal and professional relations as well as given opportunities to critique and analyze the efficacy of those theories presented.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

RELC 501
RELATIONSHIP MAINTENANCE
Graduate
This course will examine current research examining the communication processes that keep ongoing relations healthy, constructive and functions. Openness, accessibility and fairness all contribute to the health and maintenance of ongoing relationships. But other theories including social exchange theory, interdependence theory and theories of self-disclosure, uncertain reduction and avoidance all contribute to understanding why some relationships continue while others falter. The concepts, theories and models pertinent to understanding mature relationships and why they remain vital, constructive and functional will constitute the foundation for this course. Students completing the course will understand strategies for strengthening ongoing relationships while simultaneously assessing key areas in need of development or remediation.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

RELC 502
ATTACHMENT & RELATIONAL COMMUNICATION
Graduate
This course will explore the unique role that attachment styles play in the formation, maintenance, and deterioration of close relationships. Attachment theory will be used to examine how working models of self and other influence patterns of interaction among relational partners. Topics will include how attachment styles influence self-disclosure, conflict resolution, jealousy and deceptive communication. Students will also explore communicative strategies for dealing with attachment related problems.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.
RELC 503
READINGS IN INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION
Graduate
This course is designed to provide students with a framework that offers the opportunity to choose and read a list of central texts in Relational Communication. Students will all read and discuss, together, at least one historical text and two books that were identified as seminal or central texts by a group of leading scholars in Communication Studies. Students will then identify a list of 3-5 additional central texts in their particular area of the discipline (e.g., emotion, relational dialectics, face work) and read those texts throughout the quarter, reporting their findings to colleagues in the seminar. Each student's reading list must be compiled and approved by the professor. The seminar participants will complete outlines (which will be shared with all class participants), discussion questions, and facilitate class discussion about their chosen texts. Through reading and thinking about the material, this will produce high-quality and provocative discussion resulting in quality work that will be distributed to colleagues leading to a more holistic understanding about relationship studies.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

RELC 504
RELATIONAL COMMUNICATION AND ENTREPRENEURSHIP
Graduate
This seminar provides an overview of how theories and concepts of relational communication have and can be used to create business models. This course will also explore how entrepreneurial processes and frameworks can be used to create business models using a lean start-up approach.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

RELC 510
HEALTH AND RELATIONAL CMN
Graduate
THIS COURSE EXAMINES THE HEALTH IMPLICATIONS OF RELATIONAL COMMUNICATION. THE ULTIMATE GOAL OF THIS COURSE IS FOR STUDENTS TO UNDERSTAND THAT HEALTH IS PARTIALLY DEPENDENT ON COMMUNICATION, THAT COMMUNICATION INFLUENCES HEALTH, AND THAT WE OFTEN HAVE TO COMMUNICATION ABOUT HEALTH. TOPICS INCLUDE COMMUNIBIOLOGY, DEMAND-DRAW PATTERNS, SEX, AVOIDANCE OF HEALTH INFORMATION, INVISIBLE ILLNESS, SUPPORT, AND HIV.

RELC 511
TOPICS IN INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION
Graduate
Explores specialized topics within the field of relational communication. Past topics have included emotions and communication, gender and its relationship to interaction, and the social construction of interpersonal realities.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

RELC 513
NONVERBAL COMMUNICATION
Graduate
Nonverbal messages are important as we typically monitor our own nonverbal messages less, but believe others nonverbal messages more than their verbal messages. Likewise, research suggests that 65% of our communication is based on nonverbal messages and some estimates are as high as 93%. Clearly such messages are important, yet we spend little time examining such messages. That said, the goal of this course is to provide you with a research based overview of a variety of nonverbal messages, that is, everything we communicate without using our words. This course surveys various conceptual areas generally subsumed under the broad rubric of nonverbal communication. Topics include physical appearances, gestures, face and eye behavior, vocalic, proxemics, touch, time, environmental contexts as well as application of nonverbal behaviors to specific interpersonal communication contexts.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.
RELC 514
FAMILY COMMUNICATION
Graduate
This course surveys topics relevant to understanding communication phenomena in the setting of the family. Topics include: family systems, patterns, meaning, themes, roles and types, family life cycles, stressors and conflict, changing family forms and contexts. Students completing the course will understand the relationship between strong marital, parent child and sibling communication and relational satisfaction. Furthermore students will learn how to pay closer attention to the nonverbal manifestations of thoughts and feelings, be prepared for solving unavoidable family problems, be able to detect the conditions that contribute to excessive family conflict, understand how lack of intimacy weakens family structures, and distinguish between the need for instrumental and affective communication in strengthening family bonds.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

RELC 519
DARK SIDE OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION
Graduate
This course explores the "dark side" of interpersonal communication by examining the growing literature on the troubling or problematic aspects of close relationships. Topics covered include relational dilemmas, relational control and dominance, hurtful messages, paradoxical communication, social predicaments, relational transgressions, privacy violations, physical abuse, and verbal aggression. Upon completion of the course students will understand the positive and negative consequences of avoiding topics for discussion, they will understand how uncertainty constitutes both an obstacle and an opportunity in a relationship, they will better understand the difficulties of transitioning from online to offline relationships, they will understand the kinds of events that people perceive to be hurtful as well as the consequences of complaining, bullying, whining and teasing.

Status as a Graduate Relational Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

RELC 540
COMMUNICATION AND CONTEMPORARY COURTSHIP DYNAMICS
Graduate

This short-term December intercession program in Japan is open to undergraduate and graduate students in CDM who have a strong interest in computer gaming and animation. A 2-week trip to Tokyo and Kyoto takes students to visit several gaming and animation companies in Japan. Touring studios and meeting with their developers and managers help students learn the characteristics and practices of Japan's gaming and animation industries. Students also learn about issues involved in developing games and animation for the global market, and strategies for international promotion. In addition, the program introduces some of the latest and upcoming technologies in the field. Throughout the trip, students learn about the culture of Japan and how it is reflected in Japanese computer games and animation films.

During the two-week trip to Tokyo, Kyoto and Nagoya, students will visit several game, animation, and motion graphics companies as well as art museums and galleries. Visiting companies and meeting with their developers and managers will help students learn the characteristics and practices of Japan's game, animation, and motion graphics industries, which are markedly different from those in the US and Europe.

This short-term December intercession program to Kenya is organized in conjunction with the Green Belt Movement (GBM), a grassroots non-governmental organization founded by Nobel Prize winner Wangari Maathai. Her renowned organization focuses on providing income and sustenance to millions through planting trees and restoring the environment. Classroom activities on campus prior to travel introduce students to the courses' topics. While in Kenya, students and GBM members work on community projects such as tree planting, food security, and sustainable agriculture. Students enroll in two courses, one in the fall and one in the winter.

This program prepares students for lives in an increasingly globalized world by engaging issues and questions of the East African experience, including foreign pressures and influences on indigenous values and social justice dilemmas like class marginalization and the impacts of globalization on lifestyles and economies. Social and cultural exploration in which simple observation serves as a powerful tool for uncovering deeper meanings in everyday events in the lives of Kenyans and Tanzanians provides students with experiences to which they compare their lives in the United States through personal reflection. The participants' ongoing dialogue with local cultures and peoples raises consciousness on global issues of justice, peace, politics and traditions. In addition, students have the chance to explore the landscape and the major natural monuments of both countries.

This study abroad program is designed to introduce students to Spanish culture and society as they are connected to their cinema. We will also analyze the use of social media and the public role they have played in recent times.

The StudySwissPlus Program (StudySwiss+) is a study and internship experience designed specifically for students in the School of Hospitality Leadership (SHL) within the College of Commerce. The program at DCT University Center, an International Hotel and Business Management School in Vitznau, fits the requirements for SHL majors and provides high quality international training to enhance their careers in a leading location to gain such experience. In this incredibly flexible program, students choose either to study in Switzerland between one and three quarters, or extend their stay for an entire year that includes two quarters of study followed by a six-month paid internship in the Lodging or Foodservice industry in Switzerland. Students participating in StudySwiss+ are invited to study with world famous instructors, explore central Europe outside of class, and even add an international work experience to their resume.

This short-term seminar provides an opportunity for students to interact with members of a variety of NGOs in the Geneva area thus gaining an understanding of the complex nature of not-for-profit work in the current international climate.

This is a short-term immersion program for students from Symbiosis International University.
This short-term study abroad program will bring graduate students together from different disciplines for an international, collaborative experience focusing on the interrelationship of social welfare, nonprofits management and economic development in general, and understanding the collaborative work of educational institutions, faith-based organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to effect positive social change.

SAP THAI01
SHORT-TERM PROGRAM: THAILAND (SNL)
Undergraduate
This program will introduce students to Thailand's rich past and changing present by tracing its complex relationships with the countries on its borders. Students will gain a deeper understanding of this land and its people, history, and culture. They will learn that Thailand has a history unique to that of its neighbors and that its culture is not homogeneously "Thai" but is in fact made up of many rich ethnic minorities attempting to coexist.

SAP VIEN01
SHORT-TERM PROGRAM: VIENNA
Undergraduate
This study abroad program introduces students to the peoples, locations, and traditions significant in Vienna of both the fin-de-siecle and today. Present-day Vienna still bears the stamp of the great personalities that shaped its culture and identity in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, yet it is also a modernizing place, one that combines traditions of the past with innovations of the present, and exists as a global, multicultural center that straddles Western and Central Europe. It is also an ideal site for discovering how culture operates in people's lives by closely examining the things they eat, how those things are acquired in a large city, and how what people eat can tell us who they think they are. As a city of modern tastes, Vienna is shown through an exploration of music, visual arts, architecture, coffeehouse culture, as well as an examination of Viennese foods and systems of eating. VIET01

SAP VIET01
SHORT-TERM PROGRAM: VIETNAM
Undergraduate
This program offers students an opportunity to travel throughout Vietnam and explore multiple facets of its 1,000-year history, including its history of war in the twentieth century and its global emergence in the twenty-first. This program focuses on how Americans understand and interpret their encounters with other cultures, not only looking at how Americans have perceived Vietnam, but also how contemporary American culture has adopted, and been transformed by, its encounter with Vietnam. The trip features a variety of academic and cultural visits in locales such as Ho Chi Minh City, Hoi An, Hue, Hanoi, and Ha Long Bay.

SAP WADC99
TERM PROGRAM: WASHINGTON DC
Undergraduate
DePaul University, in collaboration with The Fund for American Studies (TFAS), offers students the opportunity to learn about the political process through a full time internship in Washington, D.C. for the fall semester. The program is designed for undergraduate students interested in American politics and provides internship opportunities in the areas of political journalism, lobbying, government offices and agencies, and the nonprofit sectors. Capital Semester allows students to earn 12 transferable course credits at Georgetown; essentially, students will participate in their internship during the day and take three required evening courses.

STUDY ABROAD COURSE INFORMATION
The list below displays study abroad opportunities at DePaul. Students participating in DePaul-sponsored term-long study abroad programs at partner institutions (identified by a title which begins with TERM PROGRAM: ) will register for equivalent courses at DePaul. In cases where there is not an equivalent course offered at DePaul, students will register for a Topics course in the appropriate discipline under the Study Abroad Program (SAP) subject.

SCG 25
BASIC TECHNOLOGY LITERACY
Graduate
(0 Credit) This online course provides students with a knowledge about assembling, using, and troubleshooting basic technology hardware and software. In this course, students demonstrate understanding of basic computer setup and the use of peripheral devices such as printers, speakers, flash drives, scanners, digital cameras, videos, and computer software.

SCG 401
ADVANCED LIFESPAN DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Current research and theories in human development relating to motivation, personality, learning and socialization. Case studies and an analysis of various developmental problems.

SCG 402
PSYCHOLOGY OF LEARNING
Graduate
Study of the learning-teaching process with specific emphasis on the person as a learner, human capacity and potential, learning theories and materials, motivation, concept formation, and behavior.

SCG 403
HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND LEARNING: ELEMENTARY
Graduate
This course will focus on the developmental processes of school-age children, kindergarten through middle school, by beginning with the study of the young child's social, emotional, cognitive, and physical growth and change. The theoretical and observational study of child development will be framed by an examination of culture, gender, and socio-economic factors as they inform assumptions about normative processes. The relationship between development and learning in a social context will be examined with particular attention to children's developing concepts in math, science, and language arts. Attention will also be given to the role of teachers and schools and other institutions in fostering the healthy development and learning of young people.

SCG 404
CHIL D GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course examines the growth and development of the young child in sociocultural context, from conception through age eight, including cognitive, language, physical, psychosocial, spiritual, creative, and emotional areas of development. Learning and development theories of young children, including those of Freud, Erikson, Garcia-Coll, Ainsworth, Bowlby, Piaget, Rogoff, Spencer, Vygotsky, Bronfenbrenner, and other modern developmental theorists, are explored. This course examines normative assumptions about children's processes of growth and change, and considers how learning and development occur through relationships in social contexts. The pedagogical implications of theories of development and of differences amongst children will be addressed throughout class discussions, child observations, and other course activities. This course requires 15 hours of field experience, working with infants and toddlers in a group care setting. Co-registration in T&L 480: Internship with Infants and Toddlers is recommended and encouraged.

SCG 406
HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND LEARNING:SECONDARY
Graduate
This course focuses on the multiple factors that contribute to the period of adolescence, bridging childhood and adulthood. Particular attention is given to the intrapsychic, interpersonal, biological, and socio-cultural processes that are mediated by the meanings that youth give to their identity vis a vis race, class, and gender formations within the broader society. Students will engage in interdisciplinary study of theories to examine the implications for teaching and learning processes and the role of educational institutions in fostering the healthy development of youth in society. Forms of inquiry will include students’ examination of their own lives and assumptions, critique of theory, and observations of young people in a variety of contexts.
SCG 408
EDUCATION AND SOCIETY
Graduate
A study of social forces that impinge upon the educational enterprise and analysis of the relationship to major social problems in urban education with emphasis on their social, economic, political, historical and philosophical dimensions.

SCG 409
SOCIOLOGY OF EDUCATION
Graduate
This course focuses on the relationship between school structures and culture, social relations of race, ethnicity, class, and gender, and ideologies organizing education in the United States. Students will explore a range of theories in the sociology of education that explore linkages between school structures and processes and broader social forces. Readings may examine the political economy of schooling, inequalities in educational practices, and student and teacher identities shaped by schools and the larger society.

SCG 410
INTRODUCTION TO RESEARCH: PURPOSES, ISSUES, AND METHODOLOGIES
Graduate
(formerly CUG 400) This course will examine the basic questions, issues and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conduct, writing, reading and the use of educational research as a means for informing educational theory, practice and policy. Students will be exposed to the multiple frameworks which inform education research, the various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data and will examine the advantages, limitations and values implicit in conducting and evaluating research.

SCG 411
PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION
Graduate
This course examines the relationship of education to the moral and ethical dilemmas or predicaments of the human condition. It will entail issues related to the nature of education's responsiveness, or lack thereof, to the concerns of the human condition: for example, human alienation, suffering, success and failure, caring, freedom, responsibility, liberation and agency. Special attention will be given to how these concerns influence or have social, cultural and political implications for how teachers address them within the teaching and learning process.

SCG 435
YOUNG ADOLESCENT DEVELOPMENT IN CONTEXT
Graduate
This course considers how race/ethnicity, gender, social class, and sexuality inform teachers' perceptions of early adolescent development. It also examines middle grades teaching practices and has students analyze how those practices shape the growth and educational/learning experiences of early adolescents. It promotes a broad understanding of social, cultural, and historical conceptions of adolescence, and critically examines the complexities of the physical, social, intellectual, and emotional processes of growth and change of young adolescents. It explores the range of social contexts, interpersonal relationships, and societal views, which influence and give meaning to the development and learning of middle grade youth. This course uses observational experiences, reflective inquiry and interdisciplinary theories to prepare middle grades teacher candidates to design classroom experiences that reflect and are sensitive to the socio-cultural contexts and realities of diverse middle grades learners. The course meets in the afternoon and integrates community and/or after school field experience with young adolescents into coursework. Co-requisite for this course is MGE 400. In this course, students will: 1. Analyze and assess middle grades teaching practices for their relevance to social contexts that affect middle grades learners. 2. Design classroom experiences that reflect and are sensitive to the socio-cultural contexts and realities of diverse middle grades learners. 3. Interact directly with middle grades learners from a variety of communities and backgrounds and assess and articulate the educational impact of their particular needs.

SCG 439
PHILOSOPHY AND PSYCHOLOGY OF YOUTH AND MIDDLE LEVEL EDUCATION
Graduate
This course examines foundational and contemporary theories of youth and adolescent development. It considers how these theoretical ideas relate to contemporary questions of youth and middle level education. The course explores the historical invention of adolescence, changing ideas about the meaning of childhood, as well as some of the broader social, economic, political, and cultural implications of these changing ideas. This course seeks to develop in prospective educators a broader capacity to theorize about youth and schooling, and, hence, to act critically and reflectively in multiple contexts in which youth learn. 10 - 15 field experience hours are required as part of this course.
SCG 451
DOING CRITICAL PRACTITIONER RESEARCH IN EDUCATION
Graduate
This course introduces students to different approaches to education research and research methods with a focus on critical practitioner research. Students will become discerning readers of educational research and be able to design and conduct research related to teaching and learning in a variety of disciplinary areas (English, history/social sciences, mathematics, or science) at the secondary level. They will develop skills to critically examine and reflect on practice in the classroom through discipline-specific research projects. Taken concurrently with TCH 481, TCH 482, TCH 483, TCH 484.

T&L 425 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as a TEACH student are prerequisites for this class. SCG 451 has a co-requisite of TCH 481, or TCH 482, or TCH 483, or TCH 484.

SCG 527
GLOBAL ISSUES IN EDUCATION
Graduate
Studies of school systems outside the United States, their methods, curriculum and achievements.

Status as a Graduate Social & Cultural Foundations in Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 582
PRACTICUM IN EDUCATIONAL TECHNOLOGY AND NEW MEDIA
Graduate
This course provides directed experiences in decision-making for curriculum planning, instructional design and delivery, scholarship and leadership in instructional technology-supported learning contexts. Students will engage in co-teaching activities in technology-rich classrooms; develop an instructional technology plan; make field evaluation and use of educational hardware and software; review and discuss research and professional literature in instructional technology; evaluate and use instructional products; develop and present a multimedia-based project; learn and apply theories and principles of instructional and information message design; engage in collaborative, micro-teaching activities online; develop a technology-enhanced instructional program for the K-12 environment; create a staff development plan with focus on technology applications for administrative purposes; conduct an evaluation study on-site; observe and experiment face-to-face and virtually with a range of instructional technology applications; produce comparative reviews on the use of instructional technology in various school settings. The practicum will also provide students with multiple opportunities to reflect and share their thinking with each other in a supportive community of learners and researchers. (Prerequisites: SCG 402 & CS 460).

SCG 588
INDEPENDENT STUDY IN SOCIAL AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS IN EDUCATION
Graduate
Independent Study in Social and Cultural Foundations in Education. PREREQUISITE: Permission of instructor, program chair and associate dean.

SCG 600
REGISTERED STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING
Graduate
(0 credit) Registration is this course is open to students who are not registered for any other courses but need to complete requirements/assignments for previously taken courses. It provides access to University facilities. Permission of advisor required.

Status as a student in a College of Education Advanced Master's program is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 603
PROSEMINAR: CULTURE AND EDUCATION
Graduate
This course focuses on the relationship between education, pedagogy, and theories of culture framed by a concern for social justice. Topics may include the pedagogical and political dimensions of popular culture, questions of knowledge production, the relationship between knowledge and power of the political economy of culture production.

Status as a Graduate Social & Cultural Foundations in Education student is a prerequisite for this class.
SCG 604
PROSEMINAR: IDENTITY CONSTRUCTIONS AND NEGOTIATIONS
Graduate
This course examines identity construction in educational contexts. Drawing on theoretical frameworks in the sociology of education, postmodernist, feminist and critical theories of education, and cultural studies literature, this course will explore identity as complex and multifaceted. It explores relations of class, race, ethnicity, gender, and sexuality and the implications of sociality for contemporary education.

Status as a Graduate Social & Cultural Foundations in Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 608
PROSEMINAR: IDEOLOGY, POWER AND POLITICS
Graduate
This course examines how power operates pedagogically and how domination and resistance get shaped in education. It considers power relations in society and how these power relations enter into educational discourse and practice. It also explores ways in which power produces various educational practices and ways in which power gets psychically configured. Students will examine major theories of power, analyze race, ethnicity, gender, class and sexuality as systems of power and consider the educational implications of such an analysis.

Status as a Graduate Social & Cultural Foundations in Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 610
INTRODUCTION TO RESEARCH METHODS
Graduate
(Special section of SCG 410, Introduction to Research: Purposes, Issues and Methodologies.) This course will examine the basic questions, issues and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conduct, writing, reading and the use of educational research as a means for informing educational theory, practice and policy. Students will be exposed to the multiple frameworks which inform educational research, the various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data and will examine the advantages, limitations and values implicit in conducting and evaluating research. Students will also begin exploring possible thesis topics as they begin defining their particular research purpose, methodology and issues.

Status as a Graduate Social & Cultural Foundations in Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 611
PROSEMINAR: PHILOSOPHICAL STUDIES IN EDUCATION, CULTURE AND ETHICS
Graduate
Examines both traditional philosophical questions in education from such perspectives as Africana, feminist, Latino/Hispanic thought and distinctively Africana, feminist, and Latino/Hispanic issues in a philosophical way. Some of the perspectives are, for example, the necessary conditions of a humanistic education, the relation between theory and practice, the relationship between individual and institutional/society, the role of education in the struggle for social justice, the role of aesthetics in human development and projects of political emancipation, the dialectics of history and experience in the development of liberatory ideas, and the moral and ethical dimensions of education.

Status as a Graduate Social & Cultural Foundations in Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 614
CRITICAL MEDIA LITERACY
Graduate
This course focuses on theories of media interpretation, cultural pedagogy, and cultural studies. Literature from critical media literacy, cultural studies, critical pedagogy, communication studies, sociology, and philosophy will inform student understanding of how media educates, how interpretations of media are struggled over, and how such practices relate to broader structures of power, identity formation, political economy of media, theories of communication and representation, and pedagogy.

SCG 615
THEORIZING IN EDUCATION, TECHNOLOGY AND SOCIETY
Graduate
This course explores philosophical and sociological theories of education, technology and society. Topics include the social, political, and pedagogical implications of educational technology and new media. The aim of the course is to introduce students to the history of critical theoretical perspectives on educative technologies through foundational texts in the humanities and social sciences as well as contemporary studies in the multiple educative aspects of technology. Course readings will draw on scholarship in philosophy, sociology, new media, educational foundations, and political theory.
SCG 617
SPECIAL TOPICS IN SOCIAL AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS IN EDUCATION:
Graduate
This course will provide students with an opportunity for critical examination of issues in the social and cultural foundations of education. Topics could include: educational theory; social context of education; education and social justice; education and social transformation, educational policy; and issues in educational reform.

SCG 625
CANDIDACY CULMINATING PROJECT (STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING)
Graduate
(0 credit) Registration in this course is required of all students who are not enrolled in a course but are completing culminating projects for their program of study, including theses, papers, and final portfolios. It provides access to university facilities. Permission of thesis/capstone advisor required each term. Registration limited to three terms.

Status as a student in a College of Education Advanced Master's program is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 635
ADVANCED QUALITATIVE RESEARCH METHODOLOGIES
Graduate
This course extends the fundamental principles of educational research first introduced in SCG 610. It provides students with theoretical and practical preparation in conceptual issues in qualitative research and research design. Students will explore a variety of methodological approaches to interpretive inquiry in social science research, research design, methods of data collection, research ethics, and critical analysis. This course will prepare students to undertake the capstone master's thesis requirement.

SCG 636
THESIS RESEARCH
Graduate
A student writing a thesis registers for this course for four quarter hours of credit. Where the thesis research and the writing of the thesis itself are prolonged beyond the usual time, the program advisor may require the student to register for additional credit. Completion of this course is required to receive the MA Degree in Social and Cultural Foundations in Education.

SCG 637
CAPSTONE: SOCIAL AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS IN EDUCATION
Graduate
The SCFE Capstone allows students to explore substantive areas of scholarship within their areas of interest and to create a final project or paper of their own design under the mentorship of a faculty member in the program. The Capstone is an opportunity to engage in a synthesis of what has been learned through coursework, and to integrate and compare knowledge gained from students' own research with that which was learned in the program. The capstone course will involve preparation of a substantive piece of work. Upon completion of all coursework, students enrolled in this course will select and work with a Capstone Advisor (a faculty member in the SCFE program) to discuss possible paper topics. The paper will generally consist of library-based research and will typically be 20-25 pages in length. Completion of this course is required to receive the MEd Degree in Social and Cultural Foundations in Education.

SCG 701
PHILOSOPHY OF ETHICS IN EDUCATION
Graduate
This course is a philosophical investigation into the structure and meaning of ethics within education. Education, a condition for self-formation and self-other relations, is explored as a site of ethical inquiry. It is within this framework that education, which involves learning, teaching, response, and communication, is posed as a condition of ethical possibility and not merely as the vehicle through which a certain ethics gets carried out. Primary and secondary philosophical and non-philosophical literature and authors within and outside of philosophy of education will be used to study these issues.

Status as a EDD student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class.
SCG 711
CULTURE, POWER AND EDUCATION
Graduate

The purpose of this course is to facilitate the development of a critical understanding of the larger concept of culture within the notion of multiculturalism. This begins by recognizing that educational institutions such as schools and universities are cultural institutions engaged in the making of culture. While the focus of multiculturalism is about theorizing difference in relation to the particular cultural processes that go on in schools and universities, its focus does not address how educational institutions are shaped by broader cultural dynamics that are outside of the immediate context of educational institutions. It is in this context that doctoral students will examine how cultural processes are intimately connected with social relations, especially with class relations, with gender and ethnic divisions, and with the racial restructuring of social relations. They will also explore how culture involves power, which serves to produce inequalities in the abilities of individuals and social groups to define and realize their needs. In addition, culture will be analyzed as a site of social difference and struggle. The primary focus of the course will be to explore how the larger political economy, popular culture and politics of a society effect the dynamics of how culture is constructed within social life. Doctoral students from within this framework will analyze what we mean by culture; how it is produced and consumed; the relationship of everyday life are represented by dominant cultural and sub-cultural groups and institutions. It is in this context that the course also examines how relations of power, knowledge, social identity and pedagogy within educational institutions are conditioned and shaped by the educational practice that shapes and impinges upon the internal workings and purposes of educational institutions.

Status as a EDD student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 721
HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND THE EDUCATIONAL PROCESS
Graduate

This course will examine the process of human development and learning through the ages by critically examining cross-cultural research and developmental theories designed to describe and interpret the physical, social, emotional, intellectual, and psychological processes involved. Emphasis will be placed on the range of individual, familial, environmental, and cultural factors that may enhance or inhibit human growth and development, and on the critical role that human relationships play in the lifelong interactive processes of learning and growth. Considerable attention will be paid to the historical role of power, culture, class, gender and capability in defining and interpreting certain behaviors as indicators of normative development. These normative indicators will be critiqued with regard to underlying cultural assumptions and values, their function in fostering and maintaining current social, educational and political relations, and their contribution to the current crises in urban education and the development of children and youth. Class participants will examine their perspective on human development and learning and explore the socio-cultural and historical bases which contribute to their underlying values and assumptions. Through multifaceted inquiry utilizing self-reflection, case studies, theoretical analyses, and child assessment and observation, participants will consider the implications for their work as educational leaders in approaching current challenges with students, parents, community, and teachers and in creating schools that will foster societal change to support the healthy development of children and youth.

Status as a EDD student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 735
QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS I
Graduate

This course is designed to provide doctoral level students with theoretical and practical preparation in quantitative research design including: instrumentation; data collection; statistical analysis; ethics and politics of the conduct of research; and development of analytical skills for critiquing quantitative research. Students will have the opportunity to work with real databases to conduct both univariate and multivariate analyses, including correlations, ANOVAs, and multiple regressions. Prerequisite: SCG 785.

SCG 785 and status as an EDD student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 745
QUALITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS I
Graduate

This course is designed to provide doctoral level students with theoretical and practical preparation in qualitative methods including: data collection and analysis; ethics and the politics of the conduct of research; and critical analytical skills for review and critique of qualitative research. Students will be introduced to a range of approaches to qualitative inquiry that may include: narrative inquiry; ethnography; case study; phenomenology; grounded theory; and participatory action research from a variety of theoretical perspectives. Prerequisite: SCG 785.

SCG 785 and status as an EDD student is a prerequisite for this class.
SCG 755
QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS II
Graduate
A continuation of SCG 735. Students will prepare a methodology section of a research project and will learn how to write up quantitative results of their analyses. By the end of the course students should be able to: understand quantitative methodological approaches; select appropriate data collection strategies; conduct the appropriate analysis for the research question(s) proposed and the nature of the data; and be prepared to write a candidacy paper. Prerequisite: SCG 735.

SCG 755 and status as an EDD student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 765
QUALITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS II
Graduate
A continuation of SCG 745. Students will conduct a pilot study on an issue of interest using a qualitative research design. By the end of the course students should be able to: understand qualitative methodological approaches; select appropriate data collection strategies; conduct the appropriate analysis for the research question(s) proposed and the nature of the data; and be prepared to write a candidacy paper. Prerequisite: SCG 745.

SCG 745 and status as an EDD student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 775
SEMINAR: FRAMEWORKS OF INQUIRY IN EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH I
Graduate
This course offers doctoral students a general introduction to theory and practice in educational research. First, it is designed to help students develop an understanding of the assumptions that underlie multiple approaches to knowledge construction and the conduct of inquiry in education. Second, the course will introduce students to the structural organization of a research manuscript. By the end of the course students should be able to: understand key theoretical and methodological issues in educational inquiry; engage in the critical analysis of multiple educational frameworks; recognize the components of a research manuscript; and identify a general topic area for dissertation research. Status as a EDD student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 775 and status as an EDD student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 775
SEMINAR: FRAMEWORKS OF INQUIRY IN EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH II
Graduate
Drawing upon the knowledge and skills developed in Frameworks of Inquiry I, this course is designed to enhance students' ability to critically analyze existing research as a crucial element in completing their own doctoral research. Emphasis will be placed on the preparation of a critical literature review. By the end of the course students should be able to: review the components of a research proposal; develop further the ability to evaluate research critically; conduct a literature review that will involve interpretation, evaluation, and synthesis of literature on a topic of their choice; refine a topic for dissertation research; and make an informed decision between the quantitative and qualitative sequences. Prerequisite: SCG 775

SCG 775 and status as an EDD student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCU 207
SOCIAL AND HISTORICAL ISSUES IN EDUCATION
Undergraduate
This course examines through an interdisciplinary framework sociological and historical issues and concerns associated with the relationship between education and public life. The course analyzes education as a form of cultural power, addressing its political and ideological effects. Emphasis will be placed upon the social and historical meanings and purposes assigned to education, especially as it pertains to questions of race, gender, sexuality, and the political economy of class.
SCU 335
YOUNG ADOLESCENT DEVELOPMENT IN CONTEXT
Undergraduate
This course considers how race/ethnicity, gender, social class, and sexuality inform teachers' perceptions of early adolescent development. It also examines middle grades teaching practices and has students analyze how those practices shape the growth and educational/learning experiences of early adolescents. It promotes a broad understanding of social, cultural, and historical conceptions of adolescence, and critically examines the complexities of the physical, social, intellectual, and emotional processes of growth and change of young adolescents. It explores the range of social contexts, interpersonal relationships, and societal views, which influence and give meaning to the development and learning of middle grade youth. This course uses observational experiences, reflective inquiry and interdisciplinary theories to prepare middle grades teacher candidates to design classroom experiences that reflect and are sensitive to the socio-cultural contexts and realities of diverse middle grades learners. The course meets in the afternoon and integrates community and/or after school field experience with young adolescents into coursework. Co-requisite for this course is MGE 300. In this course, students will: 1. Analyze and assess middle grades teaching practices for their relevance to social contexts that affect middle grades learners. 2. Design classroom experiences that reflect and are sensitive to the socio-cultural contexts and realities of diverse middle grades learners. 3. Interact directly with middle grades learners from a variety of communities and backgrounds and assess and articulate the educational impact of their particular needs. Junior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

SCU 336
ADOLESCENT AND ADULT GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
Theories of development throughout adolescence including current issues of problems and growth crises in attaining maturation. The course also includes adult and aging life span considerations. Emphasis is placed on the role of the early childhood professional in interaction with adults in the lives of young children (i.e., parents, grandparents).

SCU 337
HUMAN GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
This course is an introduction to the study of the process of human development from conception to old age. Through a range of theories, the periods of childhood, adolescence, and adulthood are examined with particular attention to the role of culture, gender, and class as they inform the contextualized process of growth and change across the life span.

SCU 338
THE PROCESS AND EVALUATION OF LEARNING
Undergraduate
The process involved in human learning is examined from alternative theoretical and research paradigms and perspectives. The roles of emotions, cultural differences, social realities, cognitive uniqueness, character and achievement tendencies are examined with respect to learner functioning. Alternative methods and techniques for evaluating learner development and academic achievement are surveyed and discussed. Emphasis is placed upon identifying the characteristics of individually and culturally responsive and responsible testing and assessment protocols in the school setting.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

SCU 339
PHILOSOPHY AND PSYCHOLOGY OF YOUTH AND MIDDLE LEVEL EDUCATION
Undergraduate
This course introduces foundational and contemporary theories of youth and adolescent development. It provides an investigation of how these theoretical ideas relate to contemporary questions of youth and middle level education. The course explores the historical invention of adolescence, changing ideas about the meaning of childhood, as well as some of the broader social, economic, political, and cultural implications of these changing ideas. This course seeks to develop in prospective educators a broader capacity to theorize about youth and schooling and, hence, to act critically and reflectively in multiple contexts in which youth learn. 10 - 15 field experience hours are required as part of this course.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as an Exercise Science or World Language Education major is a prerequisite for this class.
SCU 351
DOING CRITICAL PRACTITIONER RESEARCH IN EDUCATION
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to different approaches to education research and research methods with a focus on critical practitioner research. Students will become discerning readers of educational research and be able to design and conduct research related to teaching and learning in a variety of disciplinary areas (English, history/social sciences, mathematics, or science) at the secondary level. They will develop skills to critically examine and reflect on practice in the classroom through discipline-specific research projects. Taken concurrently with SEC 381, SEC 382, SEC 383, SEC 385.

SEC 364 is a prerequisite for this class. SCU 351 has a co-requisite of SEC 381, or SEC 382, or SEC 383, or SEC 385.

SE 325
INTRODUCTION TO SOFTWARE ENGINEERING
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to the activities performed at each stage of the development process so that they can understand the full lifecycle context of specific tasks such as coding and testing. Topics will include software development processes, domain modeling, requirements elicitation and specification, architectural design and analysis, product and process level metrics, configuration management, quality assurance activities including user acceptance testing and unit testing, project management skills such as risk analysis, effort estimation, project release planning, and software engineering ethics. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 212 or CSC 224 or CSC 396 or CSC 242 or CSC 262 or IM 330 or CSC 243

SE 330
OBJECT ORIENTED MODELING
Undergraduate
Object-oriented modeling techniques for analysis and design. Provides the tools and techniques needed to solve complex, real-world software engineering problems in an object-oriented manner, using the most effective elements of the Unified Process. The course covers the essential concepts and notation of the Unified Modeling Language (UML), the standard notation for object-oriented analysis and design. Team project. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 212 or CSC 262 or CSC 300

SE 333
SOFTWARE TESTING
Undergraduate
This course is designed for the software engineering professional to gain a greater understanding of the key ingredients in creating and/or managing a successful testing program to meet project needs. Topics covered include test lifecycle planning, test design & coverage analysis, complexity, levels of testing such as unit, integration, system, performance and stress testing. Best practice strategies in software testing such as verification & validation, early lifecycle testing, risk based testing and automation will also be examined including exposure to test automation methods and tools. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 383 or SE 330 or CSC 301

SE 350
OBJECT-ORIENTED SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
Principles, techniques and tools of object-oriented modeling, design, implementation, and testing of large-scale software systems. Topics include design patterns, application frameworks, architectural design, and the applications in the software development process to improve the extensibility, maintainability, and reliability of software systems. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 301 or CSC 383

SE 352
OBJECT-ORIENTED ENTERPRISE APPLICATION DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
This course focuses on applying object-oriented techniques in the design and development of software systems for enterprise applications. Topics include component architecture, such as Java Beans and Enterprise Java Beans, GUI components, such as Swing, database connectivity and object repositories, server application integration using technologies such as servlets, Java Server Pages, JDBC and RMI, security and internationalization. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 301 or CSC 383.
SE 356
SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT FOR MOBILE AND WIRELESS SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
This course will focus on the unique aspects of developing software applications for mobile and wireless systems, such as personal digital assistant (PDA) devices and mobile phones. Topics will include user interface design for small screens with restricted input modalities, data synchronization for mobile databases as well as wireless programming and the use of web services. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350

SE 357
CONCURRENT SYSTEM DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
Fundamentals and techniques of developing concurrent object-oriented applications, using a patterns-based approach. Concepts covered include threads, synchronization and object locking, thread blocking and deadlock, safety and liveness, state-dependent action and concurrency control. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.

SE 358
SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT FOR LIMITED AND EMBEDDED DEVICES
Undergraduate
This course will focus on the unique aspects, tools, and techniques for developing software applications for limited and embedded devices, such as set-top boxes, micro-controllers and smart cards. Topics will include memory management for low-memory devices and efficient programming techniques for limited processors. Students will gain hands-on experiences in customizing and configuring embedded OS, handling various types of sensors and actuators such as barcode readers, RFID sensors, etc, and building software applications that meet the functional and non-functional requirements. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350

SE 359
AGILE SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
This course focuses on the fundamentals, principles, tools, and techniques in agile software development. Students will gain hands-on experiences in agile software development through projects dealing with various aspects of agile development, including planning, construction, testing, and integration. Students will be able to effectively participate in and manage agile software development as a result of their successfully completing this course. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350

SE 368
SOFTWARE MEASUREMENT AND PROJECT ESTIMATION
Undergraduate
This course will discuss various software metrics and defect models. Productivity and effort estimation models as well as software cost estimation will also be discussed. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 223 and SE 330.

SE 371
PRACTICES OF GLOBAL SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
This course studies the challenges and solutions for developing software in a global environment. Topics covered include strategic issues related to allocation of tasks; communication issues that arise due to distance, time zone differences, infrastructure support; geographical dispersion, and lack of information communication; coordination complexity; cultural issues, technical issues related to information and artifact sharing, and architectural design, and finally knowledge management issues. Some sections of this course will include a hand-on global development project in conjunction with teams of students at other universities, while other sections will focus on a more in-depth theoretical discussion of these issues and concepts. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 301 or CSC 383 or CSC 393

SE 380
DESIGN OF OBJECT-ORIENTED LANGUAGES
Undergraduate
This course covers issues in the design and specification of object-oriented programming languages. Sample topics include the use of patterns in program representation, static and dynamic semantics, subject reduction, sub-typing, inheritance, polymorphism, genericity and concurrency. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.
SE 391
SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO I
Undergraduate
Students will work in small teams to develop realistic software systems in a master-apprentice environment. The instructor will serve as a master/mentor/project leader. Students will apply the knowledge and skills they have learned in previous course in solving real world problems. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.

SE 392
SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO II
Undergraduate
This course is a continuation of SE 391. SE 391 and SE 392 must be taken as a sequence in consecutive quarters. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 391.

SE 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable Credit. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

SE 430
OBJECT ORIENTED MODELING
Graduate
Object-oriented modeling techniques for analysis and design. Provides the tools and techniques needed to solve complex, real-world software engineering problems in an object-oriented manner, using the most effective elements of the Unified Process. The course covers the essential concepts and notation of the Unified Modeling Language (UML), the standard notation for object-oriented analysis and design. Team project. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403

SE 433
SOFTWARE TESTING AND QUALITY ASSURANCE
Graduate
This course is designed for the software engineering professional to gain a greater understanding of the key ingredients in creating and/or managing a successful testing program to meet project needs. Topics covered include test lifecycle planning, test design & coverage analysis, complexity, levels of testing such as unit, integration, system, performance and stress testing. Best practice strategies in software testing such as verification & validation, early lifecycle testing, risk based testing and automation will also be examined including exposure to test automation methods and tools. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403

SE 450
OBJECT-ORIENTED SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Principle, techniques and tools of object-oriented modeling, design, implementation, and testing of large-scale software systems. Topics include design patterns, application frameworks, architectural design, and the applications in the software development process to improve the extensibility, maintainability, and reliability of software systems. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403

SE 452
OBJECT-ORIENTED ENTERPRISE COMPUTING
Graduate
This course focuses on applying object-oriented techniques in the design, development, and integration of server-side enterprise applications using technologies such as servlets, Java Server Pages, and JDBC. Topics include web applications, multi-tier architecture, model-view-controller architecture, database connectivity, and security. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403

SE 453
ARCHITECTURE AND FRAMEWORKS FOR DEVELOPING CLIENT APPLICATIONS
Graduate
This course will focus on software architectures, frameworks, and techniques for developing web-based thin client applications as well as rich desktop client applications. Topics will include discussion on design and architectural patterns, such as model-view-controller pattern; survey of widely used development frameworks for building client applications, such as Struts, Java Server Face (JSF), Swing, and SWT, etc.; discussion of widely used techniques such as AJAX; evaluation of the strengths and weaknesses of these technologies for making technology decisions. Students will gain hands-on experiences in developing applications that utilizes these frameworks and techniques. Prerequisite: SE 452.
SE 456
ARCHITECTURE OF COMPUTER GAMES
Graduate
This course discusses the software architecture and the engineering of computer games. The topics include gaming platforms, libraries and frameworks for game development, techniques for accessing and managing low level devices and resources, and application of artificial intelligence. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403

SE 457
SERVICE-ORIENTED ARCHITECTURE
Graduate
An in-depth study of service oriented architecture (SOA) from the business, architectural, and technology perspectives. The business perspective will explain the imperatives behind SOA and discuss the significance of SOA in industry. The architectural perspective will discuss the different architectural models of software development and contrast these with SOA. The technology perspective will provide students with the opportunity to gain the required hands-on experience to analyze, design, implement and deploy SOA solutions that will meet both functional and non-functional requirements. Major topics include software architectures in practice, SOA development lifecycle, Enterprise Service Bus, SOA analysis and design methods, Web Services, and governance. Prerequisite: SE 450 or CSC 435

SE 459
AGILE SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course focuses on the fundamentals, principles, tools, and techniques in agile software development. Students will gain hands-on experiences in agile software development through projects dealing with various aspects of agile development, including planning, construction, testing, and integration. Students will be able to effectively participate in and manage agile software development as a result of their successfully completing this course. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450

SE 468
SOFTWARE MEASUREMENT/PROJECT ESTIMATION
Graduate
Software metrics. Productivity, effort and defect models. Software cost estimation. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 403 and (SE430 or SE450)

SE 475
MANAGING GLOBALLY DISTRIBUTED SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Managing Globally Distributed Software Development (GDSD) for IT projects. Issues associated with time zone differences, infrastructure support, geographical dispersion, and lack of centralized communication. The course will focus on the management, implementation and deployment of software within the context of outsourced, distributed development, and insourced projects. Additional topics include strategic management issues such as justification, vetting, consulting services and partnerships. Course will include several hands-on distributed development projects. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403

SE 477
SOFTWARE AND SYSTEMS PROJECT MANAGEMENT
Graduate
Project Management is presented from a practitioner's view. The four basic building blocks of software project management: people, process, tools, and measurements are covered. Special emphasis is placed on professional standards such as the Project Management Book of Knowledge and IEEE Software Engineering Standards. Specific topics include Managing People, Selecting Project Tools, Leadership & Motivation, Software Development Processes, Estimation, Risk Analysis, Scheduling and Tracking, Leveraging Measurements, and Project Completion. Consideration is given to rapid development and project cultural issues. PREREQUISITE(S): Knowledge of the Software development life cycle model, for example through courses such as SE430, ECT455, IS425, MIS555 or through appropriate work experience.

SE 480
SOFTWARE ARCHITECTURE I
Graduate
The Software Architecture process is concerned with describing, evaluating, and designing systems at the architectural level. This course will discuss the role of architecture and the architect in the software development cycle. It will introduce architectural patterns and tactics, architecture assessment techniques, architecture driven design, and techniques for documenting architectures. The course will involve design, development, and assessment activities. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450
SE 482
REQUIREMENTS ENGINEERING
Graduate
Requirements Engineering (RE) plays a critical role in the software development process. This course will introduce related vocabulary, concepts, and techniques, and will examine the role of RE in software and systems engineering. The course will cover topics related to eliciting, validating, negotiating, analyzing, specifying, and managing requirements. Popular RE tools will also be introduced. Prerequisite: SE430 or SE450.

SE 491
SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO
Graduate
Students will work in small teams to develop realistic software systems in a master-apprentice environment. The instructor will serve as a master/mentor/project leader. Students will apply knowledge and skills they have learned in previous course in solving real world problems. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450.

SE 511
PRACTICES OF GLOBAL SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course studies the challenges and solutions for developing software in a global environment. Topics covered include strategic issues related to allocation of tasks; communication issues that arise due to distance, time zone differences, infrastructure support, geographical dispersion, and lack of information communication; coordination complexity; cultural issues, technical issues related to information and artifact sharing, and architectural design, and finally knowledge management issues. Some sections of this course will include a hands-on global development project in conjunction with teams of students at other universities, while other sections will focus on a more in-depth theoretical discussion of these issues and concepts. Prerequisite(s): SE 450 or SE 430 or IS 430 or PM 430. A student may not take both IS 540 and SE 511 for credit toward a degree.

SE 525
SOFTWARE SECURITY ARCHITECTURE
Graduate
Students in this course will learn architectural patterns for integrating security into software such as web applications. Topics include: an overview of software security; integration of authentication, access control, and auditing into software; programming with symmetric-key and asymmetric-key cryptography, including key distribution and key management, use of certificates, and SSL/TLS; security mechanisms in modern runtime environments, e.g., code signing, code verification, access control, and security policies. Students will get hands-on experience designing and implementing secure software. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 435 and SE 450.

SE 526
SOFTWARE SECURITY ASSESSMENT
Graduate
Students in this course will learn how to conduct software security assessment to identify software vulnerabilities in software such as web applications and operating system services. Topics include: common software vulnerabilities and attack vectors; malicious payloads, including shellcode structure; and application review techniques, including fuzzing and code auditing. Students will get hands-on experience identifying vulnerabilities in software. Prerequisite(s): CSC 435.

SE 529
SOFTWARE RISK MANAGEMENT
Graduate
Identification, estimation, evaluation, planning, controlling, and monitoring of risk involved in the development, maintenance, operation and evolution of systems. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 403 and SE 430 or consent.

SE 533
SOFTWARE VALIDATION AND VERIFICATION
Graduate
Techniques, methods and tools for software inspection and testing. Theory and applications of formal verification of programs. Techniques and tools for automated analysis of programs. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450.
SE 546
SOFTWARE ARCHITECTURE AND DESIGN FOR DESKTOP APPLICATIONS
Graduate
This course will introduce students to architecture, design and implementation issues for developing GUI-based desktop application. The goal is to understand the engineering aspect of user interface development -- that is the basic software architectures and designs that govern the development of graphical user applications including patterns like the Model-View-Controller and its derivatives, event-driven design, as well as addressing concurrency, performance, caching, and software packaging and distribution issues. The course will also provide an in depth exposure to the toolkits available in Java. Examples include JFC/Swing, JMF, JAF. Prerequisite(s): SE 450

SE 549
MODEL-DRIVEN SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Advanced methods and techniques in software specification, modeling, and model-driven development. Topics include approaches to software specification and modeling, formal specification languages, techniques for structural and behavioral modeling of software systems, and tools for analysis and transformation of software systems. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 430 or SE 450

SE 554
ENTERPRISE COMPONENT ARCHITECTURE
Graduate
This course will focus on object-oriented component architectures for enterprise applications. Topics include: Enterprise Java Beans (EJB), Java Naming and Directory Interfaces (JNDI), Java Mail and Messaging Services. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450 or SE 452.

SE 556
ADVANCED ARCHITECTURE OF COMPUTER GAMES
Graduate
This course discusses the advanced issues in software architecture and the engineering of computer games. The topics include engineering and programming issues in graphics, scene management, kinematics, simulation, collision detection. Software design patterns and frameworks for computer games. Project management, configuration management, and quality assurance of computer game development projects. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 456 and CSC 407

SE 558
ARCHITECTURE AND DESIGN FOR MULTIPLAYER GAMES
Graduate
Multiplayer games were made possible by the advances in networking technology, increases in processor speed and data storage. Today, the majority of successful game titles are equipped with a multiplayer capability. This technical course discusses the fundamental aspects of multiplayer game development such as: design techniques, architectures, client and server side implementation, time and event synchronization, databases. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403 and CSC 407

SE 560
STRUCTURED DOCUMENT INTERCHANGE AND PROCESSING
Graduate
Document and data interchange among different applications is an extremely important aspect of software application development. This course will focus on emerging technologies associated with the Extensible Markup Language (XML), such as the Document Object Model (DOM), the Simple API for XML (SAX), the XML Stylesheet Language (XSL) and Transformation Language (XSLT), and XML Schema. Applications of these technologies will be discussed in conjunction with tools and techniques for parsing, transforming, and manipulating documents. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450 OR ((CSC 383 or CSC 301) and SE 430).

SE 579
ANALYTICS AND DATA MINING IN SOFTWARE ENGINEERING
Graduate
This course discusses the application of selected statistical analysis, data mining, and machine learning techniques to the area of Software Engineering. These techniques are used for purposes as varied as stakeholder analysis, mining software repositories, trace retrieval, bug prediction, recommender systems in Software Engineering domains, and software process improvement techniques. The course demonstrates how these techniques can be used to enhance project management and other software engineering activities in software intensive systems and provides students with hands-on experience using them on real project data. (No prior knowledge of data mining and knowledge management is assumed.) PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450
SE 581
SOFTWARE ARCHITECTURE II
Graduate
In this second Software Architecture course, students will be exposed to case studies of real-world software architectures for which reliability, performance, availability, scalability and other such concerns drive the architectural design. Students will gain hands-on practice in reverse engineering, designing, and assessing existing systems including performance testing. Student will build on their prior knowledge to design complex systems in principled and systematic ways. The course will involve designing and implementing a simulated high scalability, high reliability system. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 480

SE 582
SOFTWARE-INTENSIVE SYSTEMS ENGINEERING AND MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course will introduce students to fundamental principles of systems engineering for large and complex software intensive systems. The course will include a study of systems engineering failures, and will cover topics related to problem frames; systems level modeling of hardware and software components, concept definition, design tradeoffs, risk assessment, interface definition and related systems engineering activities. Additional topics such as product line development, ultra-large scale systems, and engineering of safety critical systems will also be covered. PREREQUISITE(S): (SE 470 or PM 430 or IS 430) and (SE 430 or SE 482 or IS 485)

SE 591
SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO II
Graduate
This is the continuation of SE 491. SE 491 and 591 must be taken as a sequence in two consecutive quarters. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 491

SE 598
TOPICS IN SOFTWARE ENGINEERING
Graduate
Specific topics will be selected by the instructor and may vary with each quarter. PREREQUISITE(S): For specific prerequisites, see syllabus or consult course instructor.

SE 599
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable Credit. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

SE 690
RESEARCH SEMINAR
Graduate
Readings and discussion on current research topics. Students may register for this course no more than three times. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of the instructor.

SE 691
RESEARCH SEMINAR CONTINUATION
Graduate
This course is intended for students not registering in either SE 696 or SE 698. After registering for SE 690, students register for this course in each subsequent quarter until they complete the research. Students who fail to do so will be required to re-enroll in SE 690 to meet the requirement for completing that course. Prerequisite: SE 690

SE 695
MASTER’S RESEARCH
Graduate
Students interested in a more in-depth study of a particular area will register for this course and work with a faculty member (not necessarily their academic advisor) on a research project. The work involved may include system development, empirical studies, or theoretical work. 4 credit hours of CSC 695 replaces one 500level elective course in student's degree program. This course can be taken for 1-4 credit hours for up 8 credit-hours. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of research advisor. Independent study form required. Students must successfully complete the foundation courses prior to their first enrollment in CSC 695.
SE 696
MASTER'S PROJECT
Graduate
(4 credit hours) Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their project. Independent study form required. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor.

SE 698
MASTER'S THESIS
Graduate
A student who has made an original contribution to the area (typically through 8 credit-hours' worth of work done in CSC 695, but not necessarily) may choose to complete a Master's Thesis. The student and the student's research advisor form a Master's Thesis Committee. The student submits to the committee a thesis detailing the original results of the research project. After a public defense, the committee will decide whether to accept the thesis. In that case, the student will be allowed to register for this course and the transcript will show the thesis title as the course topic. PREREQUISITE(S): Successful defense of a Master's Thesis.

SE 699
SOFTWARE ENGINEERING RESEARCH CONTINUATION
Graduate
Students register for continuation credit after registering for SE 698 in each subsequent quarter until they complete their thesis. Students who fail to do so will have to reregister for SE 698 to meet the requirement for completing that course. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 698.

SEC 309
TEACHING AND LEARNING SECONDARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS
Undergraduate
Prepares teacher-candidates for teaching mathematics at the middle school and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in teaching mathematics, methods of teaching secondary mathematics, and recent history in mathematics curriculum development. Emphasis on the development of alternative teaching strategies and the implementation of the NCTM Standards. Lesson and unit development, evaluation, and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 310
TEACHING, HISTORY, AND SOCIAL SCIENCES IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS
Undergraduate
Prepares teacher-candidates for teaching history and social sciences at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines the nature and purpose of history and social sciences curriculum within secondary schools, the current status of social studies materials and practices, and issues confronting today's secondary social studies teachers. Emphasis on alternative teaching strategies, resources for teaching and learning, teachers' responsibilities in curriculum development and decision making, and methods and materials for addressing cultural diversity. Lesson and unit development, evaluation, and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 311
THE NATURE OF ENGLISH
Undergraduate
This course is designed to help students to see that the field of English Studies is bigger than the component they probably identify as English (its Literature, Writing, and Linguistics/Grammar). Students will explore the formation of the discipline up to the current day, focusing on the shifting understanding of ways of reading, writing and thinking about language. They will strive to answer the questions: What does it mean to be a student of language and literature? and, What are the ways of knowing writing, literature, and language? In doing so, students will relate their disciplinary content to their daily lives and interests and to the larger framework of human endeavor and understanding, including identifying its importance to the personal lives of high school students.

SEC 364 and Junior Status are prerequisites for this class.
SEC 312
THE NATURE OF HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES
Undergraduate
This course builds on the content course work students have done in the seven disciplines grouped under the heading "social sciences" (history, political science, geography, sociology, anthropology, economics, and psychology). In this class students will get further exposure to the basic concepts of the social science disciplines and consider the connections as well as differences between them. The course emphasizes how different disciplinary backgrounds lead students to bring different perspectives to their study of social phenomena and helps them see these phenomena from multiple vantage points. The course will employ a case study approach framed around social issues of interest to all seven disciplines (e.g., social control, threats, development, natural disasters). By the end of the course, students will have applied the knowledge and skills of multiple social science disciplines to evaluate social phenomena, considered the relationship and differences between those disciplines, and be prepared to enter SEC 322 where they will apply their content knowledge to inquiry and teaching in the field.

SEC 313
THE NATURE OF MATHEMATICS
Undergraduate
This course builds on students' mathematics understanding by emphasizing the universality of mathematics as a cultural endeavor. In it, students will explore the historical trends in mathematic and how those trends have been taught. Students will understand that mathematics, at its core, is deductive; however, it also requires intuition. Thus, the course examines the interaction among intuition, experimentation, conjecture, abstraction, and deductive reasoning not only in the classroom but also in the everyday use of mathematics. It also examines the interplay between concrete problem-solving and generalization.

SEC 314
THE NATURE OF SCIENCE
Undergraduate
This course is about the nature of science and the interactions between science and society. It will build on the foundation of understandings that students already have about the processes and conventions of science developed through their years as science students to create opportunities for deeper understandings of the beliefs and assumptions inherent to the creation of scientific knowledge. These opportunities will be developed through direct interactions with professional scientists as well as through case studies and readings that illustrate the strengths, limits and pitfalls of the scientific endeavor as well as provide opportunities for students to relate science to their daily lives and interests and to a larger framework of human endeavor and understanding (e.g., relationships among systems of human endeavor including science and technology; relationships among scientific, technological, personal, social and cultural values). Cases will be drawn from different scientific disciplines as well as from modern and historic times. In this way, science students will have a better understanding of what it means to be a scientist and how science interfaces with society. The course is a prerequisite for SEC 324.

SEC 321
INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY ENGLISH PEDAGOGY
Undergraduate
This course builds on SEC 311 by preparing teacher candidates to distinguish between what needs to be taught (content) and how it is taught (pedagogy), with an emphasis on understanding the historical shifts in the teaching of content and how these shifts inform teaching and learning in today's English language arts classrooms. The course also introduces students to methods of inquiry and reflection on content pedagogical knowledge. Student will examine their own educational experience through the lens of the historical trends, focusing on how they learned and what they understood their teachers to be doing. This initial case study will serve as an introduction into case study methods. Students will also develop expertise in one of the three historical trend areas -reading, writing, and language - and examine how the trend has informed teaching and learning and shaped curriculum, pedagogy, and assessment. Students will develop a case study of a practicing teacher using the lens of the historical trend in which they are developing expertise. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Junior Status are prerequisites for this class.
SEC 322
INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY HISTORY AND SOCIAL SCIENCES PEDAGOGY
Undergraduate
This course builds on the content knowledge students developed and reinforced in SEC 312. More, it asks them to make the shift from considering how a person prepared in the social sciences analyzes social phenomena to how such a person teaches the social sciences. Students will do this by developing two units of inquiry-based case studies that they could use in their own classrooms. The topics of these case studies will vary from section to section, depending on the needs of the students and expertise of the instructor. Possible topics include the Constitution, the Cold War, slavery, and the Iraq War. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the course work they have done in the content areas as well as the instruction they see teachers delivering in their field experiences. They will contemplate such questions as: “What are the connections between the social science disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the high school level? What are the differences between the social science disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about social events but also the freedom to pursue their interests and make sense of the world on their own terms?” By the end of this course, students through readings and their projects will have advanced their learning about the nature of inquiry, its implementation in the classroom, and the connections and differences between the social science disciplines. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364, SEC 312 and Junior Status are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 323
INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY MATHEMATICS PEDAGOGY
Undergraduate
This course builds on SEC 313 by introducing students to inquiry methods to understand the teaching and learning of mathematics. Students will explore how mathematics has been and is taught by examining major paradigm shifts in mathematics education and the impact those paradigms and shifts have on pedagogical content knowledge, or knowledge of how to teach disciplinary content. Students will use case study methods to look at instructional practices and begin to articulate their own mathematics teaching pedagogy. With the completion of this course, students will have a deeper understanding of mathematical literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching mathematics, as well as being able to identify what makes an exceptional math teacher who is able to address the needs of all students. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364, SEC 313 and Junior Status are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 324
INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY SCIENCE PEDAGOGY
Undergraduate
Following SEC 314, this course transitions from asking “what does a scientist do?” to a consideration of why science literacy in the general public has been so difficult to achieve. The focusing questions for SEC 324 are: “How do we teach science? What is science literacy? Why is an understanding of science important to the general public? And what are the major obstacles and strategies to achieving science literacy?” The course begins by participants self-reflecting on their own educational experiences that led to their paths in science education: what have been their successful learning strategies, how have teachers influenced their education and what have been successful (and less than successful) classroom instructional strategies? From this, students will begin science classroom observation, discussing their observations with their peers, and speaking with educators about their experiences teaching high school science and about the goals and short-comings of science education. Throughout this process, students will read seminal literature on science literacy and explore cases challenging their notions of the teacher-learner relationship and the relationship between science and society. As a result of this course, students will gain a deeper understanding of scientific literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching science as well as identify what makes an exceptional science teacher able to prepare both future scientists and a knowledgeable public. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364, SEC 314 and Junior Status are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 325
LITERACY IN THE CONTENT AREAS
Undergraduate
The course explores the interrelationships between reading, writing, and other forms of communication (e.g., classroom talk, technology, visual arts) that are available to content area middle-level and high-school teachers. There will be an emphasis on the interrelationship of all aspects of language, oral and written, that result in literacy as a meaning-making tool in the construction of content-area knowledge. The course will discuss specific aspects of literacy processes from a multicultural, multilingual perspective as they apply to a variety of school settings in general and urban schools in particular. Students will become acquainted with theoretical issues as well as a wide range of literacy-teaching strategies including reading, writing, research, and study skills to be tailored to the needs of different students and to be applied across a variety of learning situations and text types. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

Senior status and SEC 371 or SEC 372 or SEC 373 or SEC 374 or status as a music education student is a prerequisite for this class. Exercise Science (BS) students are restricted from taking this class.
SEC 326
TEACHING WRITING
Undergraduate
This course prepares teacher candidates for teaching writing and composition at the middle and secondary school levels. The course focuses upon methods of teaching composition, examination of literature and research about the composing process, the development of language and reading skills, and the assessment and evaluation of writing. The development of writing curriculums will also be explored. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.
SEC 364 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 328
TEACHING LITERATURE
Undergraduate
This course prepares teacher candidates for teaching literature at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in the teaching of literature, explores methods of teaching major literary genres, addresses problems of literacy and focuses on the transactional nature of reading and writing. Emphasis on developing a repertoire of ways of teaching literature and a variety of literature curriculums.
SEC 364 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 329
TEACHING YOUNG ADULTS LITERATURE
Undergraduate
This course is devoted to the study of Young Adult Literature: an exciting, emerging genre of literature. Issues and ideas to be examined include the following: current debates regarding issues in curriculum and teaching; selecting, reading, evaluating, and teaching young adult literature; cultivation of life-long reading habits and literacy development. Students will become familiar with major writers of young adult literature, read diverse texts, explore major genres, review award winning novels, consider the role of the media, and develop creative projects. 20 Level 2 Field Experience hours.
SEC 364 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 339
TEACHING SCIENCE IN THE SECONDARY SCHOOL
Undergraduate
This course prepares teacher-candidates for teaching science in the middle school and high school. This involves reviewing the processes of science, theories of learning, and instructional strategies appropriate to laboratory science. This course also provides an update on the current trends and issues in science education as well as an analysis of successful science curricula programs. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.
SEC 364 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 363
ORIENTATION TO SECONDARY TEACHING AS A PROFESSION
Undergraduate
(6 credits) In this process-oriented course, students engage in critical reflection on the roles and expectations of secondary educators from both institutional and community perspectives. Questions considered will include: what is an educator, what is a professional, what are the attributes of effective teachers, what do effective teachers do? Students will examine their own values and begin to develop their own philosophies about education and teaching. 30 Level 1 Field Experience hours at arranged sites.

SEC 364
METHODS: CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS
Undergraduate
(4 credits) This course will examine materials, methods, and techniques appropriate for teaching in secondary schools. Topics include: educational goals; the development of a rationale and underlying assumptions; instructional goals and objectives; learning objectives; both cognitive and affective; classroom environment; classroom management principles and techniques; multicultural materials in various content areas; the development of appropriate methods and materials; current curriculum issues and controversies. 30 Level 1 Field Experience hours at arranged sites.
Junior standing is a prerequisite for this class.
SEC 365
ART AND PEDAGOGY
Undergraduate
This course alongside SEC 366 is intended as a two course sequence each complimenting the other. As SEC 366 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art's content, SEC 365 focuses on teaching visual art. Building from the content requirements from their program or experience, students will understand how the art studio (content) experiences where ideas are developed translate to the preparation of teaching. Students will do this through multiple curriculum based projects intended to use in their own classrooms, including a 6th ? 12th grade general course reader to assist in introducing an art historical overview that influences and connects to general middle and high school studio practices. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the coursework they have done in the content area as well as watching and learning from classroom teachers and teaching artists in the field. They will contemplate such questions as: "What are the connections among the arts disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the middle and high school levels? What are the differences among the arts disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about artists, artistic periods and the nature of how artworks are produced. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 366
TEACHER AS ARTIST
Undergraduate
This course builds on the work in SEC 365, which alongside SEC 366 is intended as a two course sequence each complimenting the other. As SEC 365 focuses on the art of teaching the visual arts, SEC 366 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art content. Historically, artistic movements have shaped and currently identify the theories we use to define our most immediate environment. The major concepts can be connected to the artist studio and to the descriptions some artists make about the studio as a teaching space. In the course students will be introduced to a wide range of artists and their work, artistic movements and the individual artists who use teaching as a medium. How does an emerging artist or pre-service teaching artist draw on the understanding of their own work as a platform to build core principles of pedagogy. What is the link that combines a dynamic studio practice with an inspired methodology for teaching visual art. We will address these questions through creating a visual art teaching curriculum portfolio and writing a reflective artist monograph, produce a final exhibition of their work and work alongside teachers and artists in the field. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

Exercise Science (BS) students are restricted from taking this class.

(1-4 credits) Permission of instructor, program chair and Associate Dean are required.

This course provides a framework and strategic skills that will enable Kellstadt students to make a significant impact on the future of their organizations and in their careers. The seminar course focuses on the Return Driven Strategy framework which describes the 11 tenets of successful business strategy, leveraging genuine assets, managing significant forces of change and understanding strategic valuation. This seminar course will focus on a deep analysis of the strategies and successful value creation of great companies. Each student will participate in a team project to apply the tenets of Return Driven Strategy to a high performance company. The Return Driven Strategy framework will be useful for MBA candidates working in various areas of corporate management, management consulting, investment banking, equity research, and for entrepreneurs. The seminar-driven course will include an executive seminar session for the morning session of the first day which will include presentations by executives and top thought leaders in strategy.

ACC 500 or its equivalent is a prerequisite for this course

The course focuses on strategy execution and strategic performance measurement, including the balanced scorecard and value-based management as frameworks for describing and executing strategy. The course includes the latest developments in Strategic Risk Management and the implications for strategy and performance measurement. The course will study how high performance companies measure and manage performance, strategic risk, and corporate sustainability performance, as well as the ethical dimensions of strategy and execution. The seminar-driven course will include an executive seminar session for the morning session of the first day which will include presentations by executives and top thought leaders in strategy execution.

ACC 500 or instructor's consent is a prerequisite for this class.

This course focuses on leading practices in valuation and practical methods for driving valuations from strategic corporate analysis. The course shows the link between strategic analysis and valuations - converting our qualitative understanding of company initiatives into quantitative forecasts and valuation models. The guiding principles for developing valuation models, and the tools and techniques for enhancing that analysis are introduced. This course builds a skillset for evaluating other valuation models and a first-hand experience in building valuation models for companies. The course differs from traditional treatments in its focus on the actual building of valuation models directly from financial performance and the valuation projects based on real-time data. This course is co-designed and co-taught by Dr. Mark L. Frigo, and Joel C. Litman, Clinical Professor of Business Strategy at DePaul's Kellstadt Graduate School of Business. They have been combining their efforts in the research, study, and development of business strategy models and frameworks for execution and value-creation and have assisted a wide range of public and private companies in the application of these concepts.

THE BEATLES AND THE CREATIVE PROCESS
Undergraduate
This course is offered in SNL’s online program. Online course conform to University scheduling, but are conducted exclusively through Desire to Learn (D2L). There are no in person class meetings. The Beatles are significant in many ways: they were an unprecedented show business phenomenon; they were leaders of Sixties cultural rebellion; and they stand, for many, as a signal instance of popular entertainment attaining the status of high art. This course will examine the musical craftsmanship of the Beatles, focusing on their work as songwriters and record makers. Recent audio and print releases documenting the group’s performing and recording history provide a unique and detailed glimpse of the Beatles’ creative process. We will utilize these materials to closely trace the development of the group’s work while using other resources to place it in a larger historical and cultural context. The goal is to shed critical light on this recent chapter in cultural history. That discussion will, in turn, highlight questions about creativity in a modern context where commerce vies with art, technology redefines performance and an emerging global village culture transforms concepts of originality and tradition. Arts and Literature.

SNC 186
SPIRITUALITY AND HOMELESSNESS
Undergraduate
This course will examine the broad issue of homelessness by providing students the opportunity to reflect upon a service learning experience at a community-based organization that serves the homeless population in Chicago. Students will explore what can be learned about themselves as reflective practitioners, service learners, and spiritual human beings when reflecting upon this experiential learning process. Through the class discussions, assigned readings, invited speakers, and journal assignments, students will reflect on their own beliefs and perceptions of homelessness and analyze the history, causes, and policy associated with this societal problem. Junior Year Experiential Learning.

SNC 187
RACE AND IDENTITY IN THE AMERICAN THEATER
Undergraduate
This course will explore issues of race and racial identity in American society through the medium of theater. Students will examine a diverse range of theatrical pieces and consider the social and political context for each work as well as the impact each has had on American culture. The class will also view a play on these themes at a Chicago theater. Arts and Literature.

PROBLEMS AND ISSUES IN CONTEMPORARY ETHICS
Undergraduate
This course is offered in SNL’s online program. Online course conform to University scheduling, but are conducted exclusively through Desire to Learn (D2L). There are no in person class meetings. An introduction to moral philosophy with emphasis on the conflict between “moral relativism” (or “subjective” ethics) on the one hand and “moral realism” (or “objective” ethics) on the other. During the course you will be introduced to classic theories and leading figures in the history of ethics, from Plato and Aristotle to Kant and Nietzsche. Course content will focus on issues (e.g., poverty, drug use, capital punishment, sexual behavior, euthanasia, biomedical research, animal rights, political violence) at the center of contemporary ethical debate in the United States and throughout the world. Philosophical Inquiry.

SNC 189
CONTEMPORARY NATIVE AMERI CAN/AMERICAN INDIAN ISSUES
Undergraduate
Native Americans are part of our history and heritage, yet many Americans have little knowledge beyond stereotypes. While invisible to the mainstream, Native American cultures are surviving, striving and in some cases, thriving as we enter the new millennium. This course will explore the complex issues facing Native Americans today through discussions, films, readings, experiential learning activities and Native American news media to enable students to gain a cross-cultural perspective. Students will choose an area of focus on this subject and conduct independent research to present to their classmates. Self, Society and the Modern World.

AFRICAN-AMERICAN STUDIES IN CRITICAL PERSPECTIVE
Undergraduate
This course is offered in SNL’s online program. Online course conform to University scheduling, but are conducted exclusively through Desire to Learn (D2L). There are no in person class meetings. This course is important for students who seek to gain a comprehensive understanding of African-American history in the United States. It will begin with discussions of African culture, the Atlantic Slave Trade, and early forms of slavery/indenturing. It will pay particular attention to the colonial and Revolutionary experience, delving into the mass exodus of Africans during the Revolutionary War, and African-American’s role and position in the country’s formative years. Enslavement, the Civil War and Reconstruction will follow as key areas of study. In every discussion, students will be asked to look for parallels between the contemporary and 18th and 19th century African-American experience and, where appropriate, to identify key social and cultural thinkers and leaders of the various historical periods. The primary texts for the course will be John Hope Franklin’s From Slavery to Freedom, articles and readings written by scholars and important early African-American artists and intellectuals, and video presentations. Understanding the Past.
SNC 191
ISSUES IN SCIENCE AND RELIGION
Undergraduate
This course develops students’ understandings of the scientific and religious constructions of self in the modern world (natural and social). The institutions and bodies of knowledge comprising science, religion, and their overlap are critically analyzed. Key historic debates are examined, for example: the Vatican's trial of Galileo for his teachings of a heliocentric universe; the controversial reception of Darwin's theory of evolution; and the 2001 U.S. policy on embryonic stem cell research. Through such analyses, the course develops students' skills in making ethically-informed decisions and thus recognizing their roles in the public debates involving the intersection of science and religion. Self, Society and the Modern World.

SNC 192
NEW ORLEANS IN SONG, STORY & STRUGGLE
Undergraduate
The tapestry of New Orleans culture is tremendously rich and varied. This course will concentrate on two strands in that tapestry: music from New Orleans and fiction about it. Students will learn about music forms which originated in the city or its environs and which have gone on to dazzle the world, including jazz, rhythm and blues, zydeco and funk. We will situate these art forms in social and historical context and examine the complex creative processes which have shaped them. We will become familiar with innovators and icons such as Louis Armstrong, Professor Longhair, Clifton Chenier, the Neville Brothers and Dr. John. We will also read works by literary artists who have a background in and/or fascination with New Orleans, including The Awakening by Kate Chopin, A Streetcar Named Desire by Tennessee Williams, and Mumbo Jumbo by Ishmael Reed. Moreover, we will consider the role played in American history and imagination by New Orleans, as well as the role played by images and fantasies of New Orleans in struggles for social justice at the local and national level. Arts and Literature.

SNC 193
THE SCIENCE OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION
Undergraduate
This course will engage you in scientific inquiry on the nature of sexual orientation. You will be challenged to master the scientific content of leading programs of research on twins, brain and other anatomical structures, hormones, genetic linkages, birth-order, and animal behavior through assigned readings, lectures, and multimedia resources. Moreover, you will also engage in the scientific process through a collaborative research project concerning an aspect of sexual orientation that leads you through the steps of stating a question, designing a study, collecting and analyzing data, and interpreting the results. You will also develop skills in identifying the limits to particular forms of scientific inquiry by recognizing the constraints of methods, sources of bias, reliability of results, and certainty of conclusions. This course will encourage you to place the modern research within ethical and social contexts in which to make judgments about the potential relevance and impacts of scientific knowledge about sexual orientation. Scientific Inquiry [SI]

SNC 194
CHINA: MONEY, POWER AND THE 21ST CENTURY
Undergraduate
This online course analyzes the dramatic impact of the greatest migration of people in the history of the world, which is occurring right now, in China. Students will become more aware of the relationship between growth in China and the balance of power in the world. Understanding China's two economic systems, one country policy will help learners better understand diverse cultures, inequities and differing theories about self and society. Theory, current and projected economic and demographic data and academic research will equip students with the skills to analyze the institutions, societies and decisions that will shape the world in the 21st century.

SNC 195
UNDERSTANDING GLOBAL HEALTH CONCEPTS AND PRACTICES
Undergraduate
Many of the greatest challenges in public health are global. This course uses a multidisciplinary approach to discuss the major underlying determinants of poor health and the relationship between health and political, social and economic development. Drawing upon the sciences, social sciences and humanities, learners will be introduced to the evolution of modern approaches to the setting of global health priorities, the functions and roles of health systems, an overview of current global health practices, and the major institutional players in global health. We will explore the factors shaping the global distribution of disease and their connection with issues of social, economic and political development, as reflected in the Millennium Development Goals. We will also consider the impacts of globalization on health risks and availability of health resources.
SNC 196
BEAUTY POLITICS IN CULTURAL CONTEXT
Undergraduate
How can we celebrate our different skin tones, body sizes, hair textures, and cultures, and yet still acknowledge our similarities? How can hair/body stories help us understand each other and ourselves? This course explores the complex ways the body is portrayed, (mis)understood, and celebrated worldwide. The experiences of hair/body politics of African descended peoples are centered and Latin, Asian, and European cultures are also discussed. Critiques of scholarship, media, and applied research will afford students the opportunity to examine social constructs about gender, sexuality, race, class, ability, and emerging issues such as biracialism and multiculturalism in global, virtual and political contexts.

SNC 197
ANALYZING AUSTEN’S PRIDE AND PREJUDICE
Undergraduate
This course is offered in SNL? s online program. Online course conform to University scheduling, but are conducted exclusively through Desire to Learn (D2L). There are no in person class meetings. Jane Austen must have known something about universal truths. Her novel, Pride and Prejudice, which begins with the sentence quoted above, was first published in 1813. Still in print today, it has also been made into at least eleven movies, four of which were released since 2000, including a Mormon and a Bollywood version. In this class, we will read the novel in the context of the gender and class norms at the time Austen wrote her book and then consider how Austen's exploration of universal truths is reinterpreted in more contemporary film versions of this novel. In exploring Austen's creation and the many reinterpretations of her work, we will use both analytic and creative writing assignments as well as class discussion to examine how context informs creativity and how creativity informs analysis. You must definitely do not need to be a creative writer to take this class.

MINDFULNESS MEDITATION RETREAT AT STARVED ROCK
Undergraduate
This online-offsite hybrid course includes a four-day mindfulness meditation retreat at Starved Rock State Park in Utica, IL as well as online learning activities throughout the quarter. Mindfulness meditation practices are powerful ways of regulating and investigating our awareness of our experience. They are rooted in Buddhist traditions and are being widely re-interpreted by neuroscientists, psychologists, philosophers and others. These practices have many benefits, such as improving health and well-being, deepening relationships, and enhancing engagement in learning, work, leisure and civic activities. Consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this class.

Junior Standing or above is a prerequisite for this class.

SNC 199
WORK, PLAY AND REST: INTEGRATING THE FRAGMENTS
Undergraduate
Life has become fragmented. In our modern lives, we strive to maintain work, play and rest in separate realms, within which we work hard, play hard, and even rest hard, all in the hope of finding balance. But when work invades play, and rest is sacrificed for either one, it might be time to shift the paradigm of separateness we have sought to maintain. This course will explore ways we can integrate the fragments of our lives in order to find more fulfillment, balance, satisfaction, and consequently relief both within these three arenas and in the “gray areas” in between. Learning will occur in two modalities, each of which will enhance the other: experiential guided movement, storytelling and vocal activities from the improvisational practice of InterPlay (http://www.interplay.org/) and the study of literature (articles, books, websites and videos) concerning mind-body awareness. Through the in-class practices of InterPlay, students will explore how stressors are held in the body, and define for themselves which aspects of creative expression help to release what no longer serves. Basic movement, storytelling and vocal activities will be introduced in an incremental way, with no prior experience necessary. The focus will be on both individual expression and collaborative possibilities, and personal as well as community and organizational applications will be explored. In our study of the science behind mind-body awareness through class discussions and written assignments, students will explore the application of concepts in conjunction with the experiential model offered by the InterPlay practice. Part practical activities, part reflection, and part synthesis of defined concepts and models, students will be asked to come to this class as willing participants and identify what methods and systems are applicable to their own lives, and what, from their unique vantage point, could constitute elements toward a new model of health and wholeness.

SNC 201
PSYCHOLOGY FROM AN AFRI CAN-CENTERED PERSPECTIVE
Undergraduate
This course utilizes an African-centered theoretical framework to examine salient themes pertinent to the psychology of people of African descent, including child development, family functioning, identity, education, racial oppression, spirituality, and healing. It takes an historical and topical approach to foster greater understanding about the course content. Through this examination, the learner will become more knowledgeable about the psychological experiences of people of African descent, the role of history and culture in human development, and the subjectivity of research in the social and natural sciences. They will also reflect on the relevance of the course material to their personal lives.
SNC 202
GLOBAL BUSINESS, TECHNOLOGY AND THE UNITED NATIONS
Undergraduate
In this course, discussions focus on global business and technology issues U.S. and Mexican companies face today and UN experts in New York bring other countries into the global perspective via video conferencing. Topics include how corporations are using technology to facilitate their global operations; the work of the United Nations in helping implement corporate responsibility, international labor rules and human rights in businesses; best practices in cross-cultural business; and, other related global business issues. Several students outside of Chicago will participate via Scopia desktop video conference application. Students and professors at University Panamericana in Mexico City and in Guadalajara will participate in discussions with the UN experts and with DePaul students via video conferencing. UN discussions are videotaped and posted on DePaul iTunes for student review.

PARTICIPATION AND DEMOCRACY IN AMERICA
Undergraduate
This course is offered in SNL's online program. Online course conform to University scheduling, but are conducted exclusively through Desire to Learn (D2L). There are no in person class meetings. The course explores inequalities in American democratic participation, investigating why different groups do or do not engage with the political process. The course begins with some famous arguments about why participation matters. Trends in voter turnout then become the primary object of study, but we also consider other forms of participation including writing to members of Congress, attending political meetings, and contributing money. Different factors we explore over ten weeks include the impact of education, income, age, and knowledge about and psychological interest in politics. We also investigate legal-institutional barriers to participation, both historically and in the present day.

SNC 204
DEMOCRACY IN EVERYDAY LIFE
Undergraduate
Democracy may be described as a form of government in which the general public can participate in its decision making process. However, democracy is often used as a term to identify any system that is not patently a dictatorship. Democracy may be addressed not only as a political, but also as a social system with implications in everyday life. How does literature about social and private life define democracy? What criteria do democratic environments meet? How should people behave to foster democratic environments? How do democratic leaders behave? This course will foster a profound understanding of democracy and democratic behavior and identify criteria, which define democratic environments like equality, solidarity, positive human relationships, participation and commitment to each other. These and other criteria will be analyzed critically and applied to everyday contexts in the private sphere and the workplace. The role of authority, power and leadership in a democratic environment will be discussed. The course offers a wide range of activities like research for literature, critical reading and discussion of topics, analysis of cases, simulation of democratic and non-democratic environments and problem solving of real life issues. The ideas of others serve as a common course content, as presented in the material assigned to this course. Students are asked to participate actively and critically, to work individually and in study groups, using their own experience as a field of analysis and reflection. Active participation in group activities will make the course itself a model for a democratic teaching and learning environment.

RESISTANCE DURING THE HOLOCAUST AND WORLD WAR II
Undergraduate
This course explores the history of the Holocaust in the context of the Second World War (1939-1945) with a central focus on examples of resistance to discrimination, fascism and oppression. We will explore varied forms of opposition including armed resistance, spiritual resistance, resistance through writing and identity preservation. We will read autobiographies, view documentary and dramatic films, and use museum resources to develop our understanding of resistance. Required activities include a visit to the Illinois Holocaust Museum and Education Center (Skokie, IL). We will also consider the implications of this history for making ethical choices in our world today.

THE FIGHT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS: ONE WOMAN'S CRUSADE
Undergraduate
Helen Prejean is a leading human rights activist in the United States. For the past 30 years, she has helped shape conversation about equal treatment for all within the criminal justice system, especially persons of color and the materially poor. Dead Man Walking, the eyewitness account of her experience accompanying condemned prisoners to execution, has had a major influence on discussion of violence, poverty, civil rights, criminal law, and social justice. In this course, we use her work and interact with her personally to study power inequities across race and class lines that perpetuate injustice and examine her strategies for reform.
SURROUNDINGS, AND RESEARCH INTO THE PLACE WE ARE LOCATED, IS THE MEDIUM FOR TRANSFORMATION AND UNDERSTANDING TO TAKE PLACE.

This subject requires students to investigate how events of personal significance are affected by location and the disciplines. This class will involve field trips, online discussions, and research into the place we are located, is the medium for transformation and understanding to take place.

SNC 209
EXPLORING EARTH'S PHYSICAL FEATURES
Undergraduate
This course advances student exploration of earth's 4.5 billion year geologic record in order to evaluate the planet's evolution and the interrelationships between humans and landforms. Through the application of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and prevailing technologies used by geologists, emphasis is on plate tectonics, geologic time, the rock cycle, weathering, earthquakes, fluvial features, rock structures, volcanoes, mountains, plateaus, plains, glacial features, deserts, caves, and coasts. Students also assess human reliance on landforms, the economics of landforms, and cases of earth pseudoscience. Learning is assessed through labs, fieldtrips, a scientifically-formatted research paper, an exam, and contributions to online discussions.

SNC 210
PREHISTORIC LIFE
Undergraduate
This course is offered in SNL's online program. Online course conform to University scheduling, but are conducted exclusively through Desire to Learn (D2L). There are no in person class meetings. This course promotes students' investigation of fossils to interpret the character of 3.5 billion years of biological evolution and ecological change on earth. By way of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and applicable technologies, emphasis is on the exploration of the earliest evidence of life, development of multi-celled plants and animals, dinosaur evolution, mass extinction events, mammal diversification, human origins as well as appraisal of the societal reliance on fossil resources and the persistent debate over evolution versus creation. Learning is assessed through labs, a fieldtrip, an exam, video summaries, contributions to online discussions, and a research paper in a scientific format.

WRITE WHERE YOU ARE: WRITING ABOUT THE PLACES WE LIVE
Undergraduate
In "A Walk in Chicago: Never a City so Real," Alex Kotlowitz, a "Chicagoan by accident," claims, "An imperfect place, Chicago is America's city; it dreams America's dream." In this course, students will investigate the ways in which location has shaped their own American dream. Place is an indispensable factor in any person's negotiation of his or her dream, as Kotlowitz points out in his portraits of individuals who have shaped and been shaped by their city, Chicago. To understand ourselves, then, we must understand our cities. To understand our cities we must understand the influences from science (geology, biology, ecology), art (literature, film) and social science (history, psychology, sociology). To write about our cities, we must understand and synthesize the city and our selves. In the convergence of these experiences comes a new understanding of space, place and identity. This subject requires students to investigate how events of personal significance are affected by location and the disciplines. This class will meet in the classroom five times; students will also be required to complete four field trips to locations in and around their city and one "virtual" field trip. Sharing on D2L will complete the field trip experience. Students will grow to appreciate their home cities/towns for their evolution and current struggles; students will learn about themselves by placing themselves in the midst of this evolution and struggle. Writing the personal essay, which requires synthesis of one's self-reflection, reflects on one's surroundings, and research into the place we are located, is the medium for transformation and understanding to take place.
SNC 212
ROOTED IN THE CITY: WRITERS & WRITING IN CHICAGO
Undergraduate
Who are the writers rooted in Chicago? What were and are their concerns, themes, styles? How can they teach us about the city, but also about writing? In this class, students will read, discuss and write about work written by such Chicago writers as Nelson Algren, Gwendolyn Brooks, Stuart Dybek, Sandra Cisneros, Studs Terkel, Marc Smith, and Mike Royko. We will consider the nature of civic engagement and creativity in the literary arts, as well as pay close attention to the formal elements of the poems, short stories, and essays read in this class. We’ll also explore how these texts compel us to think about power and its circulation in cultural as well as social contexts.

SNC 213
FAMILY LIFE: THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE OF FAMILIES
Undergraduate
In history, families have been defined as mother, father, and children. In our current experience, more families differ from that model than comply with it. Family structure is evolving. Missing fathers, single parents, and blended families are only a few of the changes to the family structure that have occurred with some significance beginning in the 1950s. What influences family structure? Do economics and education make a difference? Are race and ethnicity important factors? What about gender, personality and religion? Is the two parent family necessary? What role do grandparents and great grandparents play in the changing family? Perhaps the most important question we can ask about the family is what comes next. What are the many ways in which families might be redesigned in the future? How do these changes impact individuals in society?

SNC 214
SOCIETY AND THE FAMILY, PLOTTING THE FUTURE
Undergraduate
In history, families have been defined as mother, father, and children. In our current experience, more families differ from that model than comply with it. Family structure is evolving. Missing fathers, single parents, and blended families are only a few of the changes to the family structure that have occurred with some significance beginning in the 1950s. In this course, learners will pursue the following questions: What influences family structure? Do economics and education make a difference? Are race and ethnicity important factors? What about gender, personality and religion? Is the two parent family necessary? What role do grandparents and great grandparents play in the changing family? Perhaps the most important question we can ask about the family is what comes next. What are the many ways in which families might be redesigned in the future?

SNC 215
ISSUES IN HEALTH POLICY AND ADMINISTRATION
Undergraduate
The goal of this course is to provide a general overview of the American health care and health insurance systems. We will discuss the debates over the enactment and framing of the American constitution, and the political institutions that the nation then developed. We will analyze the health care system that emerged in this political context, focusing on 1) the rise of the private health insurance system; 2) the incentives provided by government to encourage employers to purchase such insurance on behalf of their employees; and 3) the debate over the role of government in providing coverage for those outside the employer-sponsored health insurance systems. We will examine in some depth the evolution and current context of the Medicaid Program, taking a close look at the politics that led to the 2003 Medicare Modernization Act, as well as the issues raised by the implementation of that law. The following questions will be examined in this course: Is it possible to provide coverage to the uninsured without increasing the national debt? What are the main drivers of rising health care costs and what are the options for cost-containment? What are the options for aiding the uninsured? What are the options for paying for any such initiatives? What are the longstanding obstacles to comprehensive reform proposals? What are the politics of the current, Affordable Care Act, reform initiative? Why is it that the American health delivery system suffers from specialty mal-distribution (too many specialists and not enough generalists) and geographic mal-distribution (too many providers in some communities and too few in others)? What is managed care? What does the managed care industry look like today? What is the difference between disease management, care management and the current efforts to create “medical homes”? What are provider profiles and how are they used to improve quality? Why is it that the nation does not have an effective long-term care insurance system? What are the alternatives to institutionalization for those in need of long-term care services?

LEISURE, RECREATION AND HEALTH
Undergraduate

This course will stimulate your thinking about the meaning of leisure in your life. Leisure today and historically has been central to the human experience. It is an elemental experience, essential to the total well-being of every person; it is a reflection and expression of the cultural values of a society; it is an important vehicle for medical treatment. Leisure and recreation services are also essential for healthy communities in terms of social climate, environmental quality, and economic stability. Leisure services comprise one of the largest and fastest growing industries in the world, whether measured in dollars spent, persons served, hours of time devoted, or resources used. The study of leisure and recreation is a broad discipline, combining diverse fields of study and professional practice. This course will (1) illustrate the importance of leisure to you and your loved ones, (2) contribute to your ability to become an informed consumer of leisure, (3) question the binary relationship of work and leisure, (4) teach you how to use leisure to increase emotional and physical health, resulting in a higher quality of life and, (5) demonstrate social injustice related to leisure behavior and administration. The course will be interactive and

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE QUEST FOR CHANGE: 25 YEARS AND COUNTING
Undergraduate

In 1990, sociopolitical forces in South Africa began formally dismantling the structure of racial segregation known as "apartheid" that had been in force since 1948. In 1994, the first bi-racial democratic elections were held, bringing the African National Congress (ANC) to power and Nelson Mandela to the presidency. Since then, the Republic of South Africa has faced considerable challenges on various fronts, which required careful calibration of the new governance system: providing social and economic equality for all races and groups; maintaining the country’s economic strength while fostering social justice; and battling the largest HIV/AIDS epidemic in the world. Additionally, over the years, the ANC has seen challenges to its power both within its own ranks and from other parties and groups, a situation likely to intensify with the recent death of Mandela, its most prominent historical leader. This course seeks to give students a thorough grounding in the recent history of South Africa, with particular emphasis on the evolution of its Constitution, on the features that have made it one of the most advanced economies in the whole Africa, and on the country’s struggles with the HIV/AIDS epidemic. Students will visit relevant sites and programs and interact with experienced professionals in these 3 domains in both Johannesburg and surrounding areas (Pretoria and Soweto), and Cape Town. Sites include the Apartheid Museum, the Constitutional Court, and Gold Reef City in Johannesburg, the Union Building in Pretoria, Soweto Township, and Robben Island and the District Six Museum in Cape Town. Side trips are also planned to a game reserve and other areas of natural beauty near these two cities.

SNC 218
THE HAPPINESS PROJECT
Undergraduate

What is happiness? How do we know that we are happy? How can we become happier in our lives? In recent years, there have been an increasing number of college courses dedicated to the study of happiness, positive psychology, life satisfaction, etc. This course will be an introduction to how various fields and disciplines are examining topics relevant to the nature of happiness and well-being, while providing an opportunity for students to examine their own ideas and expectations for happiness. Using Gretchen Rubin's popular book, The Happiness Project, as a guide, we will review the latest scholarship, theories and research in psychology and the sciences, as well as religion, ancient wisdom and popular culture, to determine what is known and presumed about happiness. Participants in the course will develop and assess their own "happiness project" during the last several weeks of the course.

SNC 219
CONNECTING WITH AFRICA: CULTURAL AND SOCIAL ISSUES IN EAST AFRICA
Undergraduate

This travel course will introduce students to two East African countries, Kenya and Tanzania, where they will have the opportunity to investigate cultural and social issues in accordance with their particular interests for study. Students will have the opportunity to study and compare issues of cultural, economic, social, and political interest as they manifest themselves in the USA and in East Africa. Intensive study in Chicago and onsite in Kenya and Tanzania will give students a unique opportunity to reflect on and then compare and contrast what goes on in their own country and in these two East African countries. One of the main aims of this course therefore is to give students the opportunity to engage in passionate conversation with Kenyans and Tanzanians on issues of justice and peace, politics and social services in order to raise their consciousness on these global issues that face humanity in East Africa and in so many other parts of the globe today.

SOC 101

TRANSITIONAL SPANISH FOR HERITAGE SPEAKERS
Undergraduate
This course provides transitional Spanish for intermediate Heritage Learners whose primary goal is to increase basic communication in the language and an expanded understanding of Hispanic culture. Listening, speaking, reading and writing skills continue to be developed with an emphasis on conversation, facilitated by the study of vocabulary and structure, exciting readings and films.
SPN 201
ADVANCED GRAMMAR AND COMMUNICATION
Undergraduate
In this class students will work toward improving their speaking, listening, reading, and writing skills in Spanish at the advanced level as they explore various topics related to the history and cultures of the Spanish-speaking world. Students will also focus on four major grammar points that typically cause difficulty for students of Spanish as a foreign language: the distinction between ser and estar, verb tense, verb aspect (preterite/imperfect), and verb mood (indicative/subjunctive). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 202
ADVANCED COMPOSITION AND COMMUNICATION
Undergraduate
Students will work on improving their speaking, listening, reading, and writing skills in Spanish at the advanced level as they explore various topics related to the history and cultures of the Spanish-speaking world. Students will focus a little more, however, on written expression. Readings for the class will serve as models for various types of writing (primarily exposition and argumentation), and students will analyze the structure of these models as well as discuss their content. The course will also place emphasis on the effective use of the dictionary and on mechanics (such as spelling and punctuation). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 203
ADVANCED CONVERSATION
Undergraduate
This course will focus on improving the student's oral skills in Spanish through intensive practice. Students will discuss a wide range of topics, and they will practice conversational strategies for a variety of situations. Upon completing this course, students should be able to do the following: 1) talk about the past in a coherent and fairly detailed manner; 2) deal effectively with unanticipated complications (e.g. a lost ticket); 3) adapt to formal and informal situations; 4) speak broadly on topics of personal interest; and 5) make themselves easily understood by Spanish speakers who are unaccustomed to dealing with non-native speakers. Class preparation will include readings (from various genres) and films. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 205
ADVANCED GRAMMAR AND COMPOSITION FOR HERITAGE SPEAKERS I
Undergraduate
This course is the first in a series (SPN 205, SPN 206 and SPN 207) that offers a comprehensive, structural review of the Spanish language for heritage speakers. The course objectives include: 1) increasing the students' vocabulary in Spanish, 2) improving their reading and writing skills (students will read short stories and essays, and students will write guided compositions), 3) improving the students' oral proficiency (through presentations and discussions), and 4) exploring and fostering an appreciation of Latino culture and heritage. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

This course will stress and encourage the examination of the roles of women, class, culture, and religion. (Literature category #2: Spanish literature from the Enlightenment to the present). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 313
THE GENERATION OF 1898
Undergraduate
This advanced course will focus on the key group of Spanish writers known as the Generation of 1898. These writers felt that Spain at the end of the 19th century did not measure up to European standards of modernity and progress, and that its cultural and social life was at an inferior level when compared to the leading European countries. Spain was diagnosed as having a national malaise known as “abulia”; it was a kind of national sluggishness that prevented the country from profiting from and adjusting to the rapidly changing currents of modern world civilization. The task facing the Generation of 1898 was to bring Spain up to the level of the times. Students in the course will read a number of representative works written by some of the Generation's principal members. (Literature category #2: Spanish literature from the Enlightenment to the present). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPANISH IN THE U.S.
Undergraduate
Spanish is the second most widely spoken language in the United States; it has been spoken in this country longer than English has. This course is an introduction to the varieties of Spanish spoken in the US. Students will examine the evolution of the phonological, grammatical, and lexical linguistic system of the Spanish of US Latino/a communities. Students will also explore how sociolinguistic concepts such as bilingualism, diglossia, code-switching, linguistic variation, linguistic change, standard vs. non-prestigious varieties, and language attitudes manifest in the US Spanish context. This course is intended to familiarize the students with issues about language use in social context. Students will discuss results of research on the relationship between language and society in US Spanish-speaking communities. They will become familiar with sociolinguistic concepts. Students also acquire experience in carrying out sociolinguistic research. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 352
SPANISH PHONOLOGY AND PHONETICS
Undergraduate
This is an introductory course on the nature and structure of the sound system of the Spanish language. This course is offered to students who, having studied the language for at least two years, need a solid grounding of Spanish phonology and in the case of non-native speakers of Spanish a systematic practice of correct pronunciation patterns. It is also a requirement for Spanish majors. After a thorough study of the Spanish sound system, students will explore some related topics such as Spanish orthography, the history of the Spanish language, its place among Romance, Iberian, and American languages, and its rich dialectal variation. Lectures and discussions will be based on the required textbook and on additional materials (both written and audio). This class will be conducted in Spanish. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 353
THE STRUCTURE OF SPANISH
Undergraduate
This course is an introduction to the scientific study of the structure of language, with a special emphasis on Spanish. It examines the structure of sentences (syntax), the formation of words (morphology), and the construction of meaning (semantics/pragmatics) in Spanish, and in contrast to English and other languages. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 354
SPANISH SOCIOLINGUISTICS
Undergraduate
This course is an introduction to the study of the relationship between language and society through the Spanish varieties in the Spanish-speaking world. Students will examine and revise ideologies, attitudes and beliefs about the Spanish language to understand this relationship. To lead students to examine their own beliefs and attitudes about language, they will be equipped with methods of linguistic analyses and strategies to find the social in the linguistic and the linguistic in the social from a critical perspective. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.
SPN 355

Undergraduate
This course is an introduction to the history and cultures from pre-Columbian times to the present. The course will explore the politics, social structures, traditions, artistic movements and historical periods of Latin America. The scope of the course covers the main pre-Columbian civilizations, the time of the Spanish discovery and colonization, the rise of new nationalities and their development, especially in relation to the United States and the emerging globalized world. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 371
CULTURAL DIVERSITY AND LEGACIES THROUGH FILM
Undergraduate
This course explores Latin American, Latino and/or Peninsular cultures which grapple with various historical, socio-economic and political issues through film. Throughout the course, students will question the construction of individual and collective identities in film, focusing on the intersections of cultural factors such as gender, race and ethnicity, social class, and language, among others. Students will also focus on the ideological substructures involved in the shaping and conforming of those identities by cultural institutions and social systems. Students will also learn vocabulary and techniques for analyzing the formal aspects of film as well as film narrative. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 372
LITERATURE OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC
Undergraduate
This advanced course will explore cultural diversity and the Dominican Republic political, gender and ethnic visions through poetry. Through poetic class experience students will decode culture and society in the Caribbean and U.S. Dominican Latino communities. Students will focus on the following issues: political representations of identity; representations of gender and the cultural readings of "machismo"; the role of art and other forms of cultural expression in shaping identity; cultural criticism of poems as a way to understand culture and the politics of marginality and forms of political mobilization. Literature category #4 (Latin American literature from Modernism to present). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 373
AFRO-HISPANIC LITERATURE
Undergraduate
This course in contemporary literature will seek to determine what distinguishes the Afro-Hispanic novel, short story, drama or poetry from other works in these genres written in Spanish from a variety of perspectives and may have different topics each quarter. Students will read original works in order to analyze how the use of language, imagery and narrative voice reflect the experience of people of African descent in the Spanish-speaking world as seen (or heard) in the text and context of these works. In addition, students will explore how race, class, politics and culture interact and find expression in Afro-Hispanic literature. (Literature category #2: Spanish literature from the Enlightenment to the present or Literature category #4: Latin America from Modernism to the present). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 374
LITERATURE OF THE CONQUEST
Undergraduate
This advanced course in Latin American literature explores the early encounters between Europe and the Americas. Students will analyze letters, reports, histories, and political tracts from European, Amerindian, and Mestizo sources. Students will also consider some visual documents, such as images from the Lienzo de Tlaxcala and early maps. Typical areas of focus include the initial contact (Columbus), Mexico (Cortes, Diaz del Castillo, the Florentine Codex), Peru (Xerez, "El Inca" Garcilaso, Guaman Poma de Ayala), and the sixteenth-century debates over the wars of conquest (Las Casas, Sepulveda). Topics include the role of these texts as instruments of empire, strategies of representation, strategies of resistance to imperialism, the role of women in the conquest, debates over what constitutes a “just” war, and the relevance of these texts for modern Latin American identities. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.
This advanced course in Spanish literature will introduce students to the most important literary movements in Hispanic American countries, beginning with the wars of independence from Spain until the last part of 19th century. Special attention will be given to authors such as Jose Marti, Jorge Issacs, Andres Bello and Ruben Dario, among others. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

This advanced course in literature will explore the main works of the most influential Mexican poet of the Colonial period, Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz (1648-1695). One of the major themes in Sor Juana's work is the right of women to education. Sor Juana wrote poetry, plays, and essays in seventeenth-century Mexico, a society in which women's intellectual inquiry and access to knowledge was an unsafe endeavor and controlled by patriarchal hierarchies. Students will examine the relationship between politics, gender and writing in the context of the historical period, and analyze the spaces and borders occupied and visited by Sor Juana's lyric, ludic, astronomical, polemical, theatrical, theological, cosmological, culinary, colonial, and criollo writings. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

This interdisciplinary course will introduce students to the history, culture, politics, and general life of the peoples of Peru. Through an exploration of a vast array of interdisciplinary readings, visual arts and films, students will gain a deep understanding of Peru's history from its extraordinary pre-Columbian civilizations to its citizens' twenty-first century post civil war struggles to achieve dignity and justice in a multicultural, multilingual and multiethnic nation where Andean, Amazonian, African, Asian and European traditions meet. As a consequence of immense economic and social inequalities, Peru has a long history of violence that resulted in an internal war that ended recently. Particular attention will be given to contemporary developments in terms of the interaction between culture and politics. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism or Literature category #4 (Latin American literature from Modernism to present). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

This advanced course in Latin American literature explores the relationship of national consolidation and romantic novels. This course is based on the reading, discussion and critique of major representative “Foundational Fictions” in 19th-century Latin American literature. Students will examine how the construction of gender and race in these novels portrays the quest to forge new national identities. At the same time, students will analyze how the novels use their characters' romantic relationships to suggest their nation's political relationships, and thus contribute to the discourse on building the new societies that would replace Spain's colonial empire and serve as a prototype for the modern Latin American state. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

A heritage language learner has been described as "a student who is raised in a home where a non-English language is spoken, who speaks or merely understands the heritage language, and who is to some degree bilingual in English and the heritage language" (Valdes 2000:1). It is well-documented that for such students, literacy in the heritage language is often lost within just one or two generations. In this third course of DePaul's series on Latino Literacy, students will identify the prominent sociolinguistic issues that intersect with heritage language literacy. Through the reading of selected bibliography and guided reflections on both personal and service learning experiences, each student will arrive at a personalized assessment of the key topics affecting heritage language literacy. Possible topics include language socialization, language ideology and identities, and issues related to language contact with English such as code-switching and language shift/loss. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.
SPN 392
TRANSNATIONALISM AND SOCIAL JUSTICE
Undergraduate
This course explores the overarching theme of violence across different Latin American social realities. This course uses an interdisciplinary approach to explore the experience of revolution and repression in contemporary Latin America. Focusing on twentieth-century literature, films and culture, students will explore the making and unmaking of revolutionary political projects and human rights issues, the construction of distinct forms of cultural resistance and the different expressions of violence. (Literature category #4: Latin America from Modernism to the present). SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 393
LATINO MEDIA AND DIGITAL CULTURE LITERACY
Undergraduate
This course will explore the role and impact of the media in the Latino community, and how, in this context, Latinos view themselves and how others view them. Students will explore Latino communities' participation as creators and consumers of popular and media culture. Students will examine media organizations and their participants in their role in shaping popular culture. Finally, students will study the various ways that Latino communities exercise cultural citizenship as a form of resistance and in their struggle for just representation in an increasingly global society. This is an upper-level undergraduate/graduate inter-disciplinary seminar that draws on readings in cultural economy, political economy, cultural studies, history and sociology. Students who choose to take the class for JYEL credit are required to do a minimum of 25 hours of service. SPN 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

SPN 394
LATINO CULTURAL LITERACY AND COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT
Undergraduate
This course explores local Chicago histories and institutions and their engagement in politics and advocacy for Latinos. This is a Junior Year Experiential Learning (JYEL) course, and as such requires 25 hours of service.

SPN 395

CERVANTES
Graduate
This advanced course focuses on Miguel de Cervantes's Don Quijote. This course will consider how this “first modern novel” responds critically to developments in Renaissance literature, religious and political thinking, and theories of fictional and non-fictional representation. In addition to the Quijote, students will also read short selections of background material and criticism in order to situate this work in its historical context and to understand why it is considered to be among the most influential works of world literature.

SPN 412
THE SPANISH NOVEL
Graduate
This advanced course is a survey of modern and contemporary Spanish novels and will include works by a variety of authors. Throughout the course students will explore the development of the novel in Spain; the revision and reinterpretation of history, gender, and the concept and construction of the novel and characters from the perspective of modern and contemporary authors. Group work, class discussions and individual projects will help the student to gain a comprehensive view of the significant currents of the Spanish peninsular novel. This course will stress and encourage the examination of the roles of women, class, culture, and religion.

SPN 413
THE GENERATION OF 1898
Graduate
This advanced course will focus on the key group of Spanish writers known as the Generation of 1898. These writers felt that Spain at the end of the 19th century did not measure up to European standards of modernity and progress, and that its cultural and social life was at an inferior level when compared to the leading European countries. Spain was diagnosed as having a national malaise known as “abulia”; it was a kind of national sluggishness that prevented the country from profiting from and adjusting to the rapidly changing currents of modern world civilization. The task facing the Generation of 1898 was to bring Spain up to the level of the times. Students in the course will read a number of representative works written by some of the Generation's principal members.

SPN 414
CONTEMPORARY HISPANIC LITERATURE
Graduate
This course is a panoramic study of the principal works and authors of Puerto Rican Literature from the Spanish colonial period to the present. The literary production of representative authors is studied and analyzed. Students will take a thematic approach to the textual analysis of works by selected poets, musical artists, dramatists, essayists and fiction writers and examine the rise of national society in Puerto Rico and the literary forms in which it finds articulated expression. Furthermore, the course will evidence the evolution of nationality and the national through the various historical contexts including Spanish colonialism, United States occupation, and mass migration.

SPN 424
THE BIRTH OF THE NOVEL IN SPAIN
Graduate
"The Birth of the Novel in Spain" is an advanced course in Spanish literature (category #1: Spanish literature before 1700). Students will read and discuss examples of the major sixteenth-century narrative genres (chivalric romance, prose drama, picaresque, pastoral, la novela morisca, and historiography) that paved the way for Cervantes's synthesis. Texts include, Amadis de Gaula (selections), La Celestina, El Abencerraje, La vida de Lazarillo de Tormes, and two of Cervantes's novelas ejemplares. Topics to be treated include questions of social class and caste, gender roles, notions of love and honor, the rise of the modern nation-state, imperialism, mysticism, verisimilitude, literal and figurative language, and the problems associated with interpreting texts that are culturally distant from modern readers. Class will consist primarily of discussion of the assigned readings.

SPN 425
TRANSLATION AND INTERPRETATION
Graduate
This course will focus on the translation of journalistic, legal, literary, pedagogical and commercial texts. The course will also improve the student's knowledge of translation and interpretation theory and provide, through a variety of translation assignments, the opportunity to review their writing skills and knowledge of the culture in order to be able to work within different registers and learn appropriate vocabulary. Guest lectures may provide the students with first-hand experience in the field and the opportunity to explore possible future use of their experience in translation.

SPN 426
SPANISH STYLISTICS
Graduate
This advanced expression class has a clear emphasis on writing numerous texts of different length and purpose. The focus will be on developing a more effective and sophisticated prose style. In-class time will be spent on writing activities which will give students practice in performing specific writing tasks following a variety of writing styles. In-class time will also be spent on oral and written exercises designed to reinforce the correct use of grammatical structures.

Graduate
This course explores Latino gay and lesbian literature from a variety of perspectives and may have different topics each quarter. Variable topics may include: a survey of representative texts of Latino and Hispanic gay and lesbian authors or other specialized topics.
SPN 430
LATIN AMERICAN, LATINO AND SPANISH CINEMA
Graduate
This course explores Latin American, Latino and/or Peninsular cinema from a variety of perspectives and may have different topics each quarter. Variable topics may include: Peninsular, Latin American or Latino film directors and their works in Spain, Latin America or the United States. Students will also learn vocabulary and techniques for analyzing the formal aspects of film as well as film narrative.

SPN 431
FILM AS A SUBVERSIVE ART
Graduate
This course explores contested images of resistance in Latin American, Latino and/or Peninsular films from a variety of perspectives and may have different topics each quarter. The course questions the construction of individual and collective identities in film, focusing on the intersections of cultural factors such as gender, race and ethnicity, social class, and language, among others. It also examines the ideological underpinnings involved in the shaping and conforming of those identities by cultural institutions and social systems. Variable topics may include: Decoding literature through Peninsular, Latin American or Latino films based on literary works by Peninsular, Latin American or Latino authors, or other specialized topics. Students will also learn vocabulary and techniques for analyzing the formal aspects of film as well as film narrative.

SPN 432
NINETEENTH-CENTURY SPANISH NOVEL
Graduate
This advanced course is based on the reading, discussion and critique of major representative works in nineteenth-century Peninsular novel. The course will focus on the conflicting interest of nineteenth-century society paying special attention to the theme of marriage and relationship between sexes. This course will stress and encourage the examination of the roles of women, class, culture, and religion.

SPN 433
GOLDEN AGE THEATER
Graduate
This advanced course will introduce students to the Spanish theater of the seventeenth century, with a focus on the comedia, a new popular art form that appealed to audiences across social classes. Students will endeavor to read these literary works in their cultural contexts and consider their current relevance. Students may also view film adaptations of some of the plays. Topics include questions of class and caste, gender roles, various notions of honor, the early modern monarchy, the idea of free will within the context of the Counter Reformation, and the theatrical elements of everyday life. Class will consist primarily of discussion of the assigned readings.

SPN 435

SPN 440
SPANISH CREATIVE WRITING WORKSHOP
Graduate
This advanced course seeks to reinforce and further develop the student's expression in Spanish by exploring different techniques in writing poetry and fiction. After approaching some basic concepts involved in the creative writing process, and with the constant practice of writing, students will be able to create texts in the style of preference. They will also gain more confidence with linguistic abilities. This class will be conducted in a workshop format, consisting of in-class writing exercises, workshop-like peer-sharing of texts, and discussions about the creative process.
SPN 451
SPANISH IN THE U.S.
Graduate

Spanish is the second most widely spoken language in the United States; it has been spoken in this country longer than English has. This course is an introduction to the varieties of Spanish spoken in the US. Students will examine the evolution of the phonological, grammatical, and lexical linguistic system of the Spanish of US Latino/a communities. Students will also explore how sociolinguistic concepts such as bilingualism, diglossia, code-switching, linguistic variation, linguistic change, standard vs. non-prestigious varieties, language attitudes, manifest in the US Spanish context. This course is intended to familiarize the students with issues about language use in social context. Students will discuss results of research on the relationship between language and society in US Spanish-speaking communities. They will become familiar with sociolinguistic concepts. Students also acquire experience in carrying out sociolinguistic research. SPN 242 strongly recommended.

SPN 452
SPANISH PHONOLOGY AND PHONETICS
Graduate

This is an introductory course on the nature and structure of the sound system of the Spanish language. This course is offered to students who, having studied the language for at least two years, need a solid grounding of Spanish phonology and in the case of non-native speakers of Spanish a systematic practice of correct pronunciation patterns. It is also a requirement for Spanish majors. After a thorough study of the Spanish sound system, students will explore some related topics such as Spanish orthography, the history of the Spanish language, its place among Romance, Iberian, and American languages, and its rich dialectal variation. Lectures and discussions will be based on the required textbook and on additional materials (both written and audio). This class will be conducted in Spanish.

SPN 453
THE STRUCTURE OF SPANISH
Graduate

This course is an introduction to the scientific study of the structure of language, with a special emphasis on Spanish. It examines the structure of sentences (syntax), the formation of words (morphology), and the construction of meaning (semantics/pragmatics) in Spanish, and in contrast to English and other languages.

SPN 454
SPANISH SOCIOLINGUISTICS
Graduate

This course is an introduction to the study of the relationship between language and society through the Spanish varieties in the Spanish-speaking world. Students will examine and revise ideologies, attitudes and beliefs about the Spanish language to understand this relationship. To lead students to examine their own beliefs and attitudes about language, they will be equipped with methods of linguistic analyses and strategies to find the social in the linguistic and the linguistic in the social from a critical perspective.

SPN 455
THE HISTORY OF THE SPANISH LANGUAGE
Graduate

This course is a journey through the history of the Spanish language from Latin to the present day.

SPN 470
LATIN AMERICAN CIVILIZATION
Graduate

This course is an introduction to the history and cultures from pre-Columbian times to the present. The course will explore the politics, social structures, traditions, artistic movements and historical periods of Latin America. The scope of the course covers the main pre-Columbian civilizations, the time of the Spanish discovery and colonization, the rise of new nationalities and their development, especially in relation to the United States and the emerging globalized world.

SPN 471
CULTURAL DIVERSITY AND LEGACIES THROUGH FILM
Graduate

This course explores Latin American, Latino and/or Peninsular cultures which grapple with various historical, socio-economic and political issues through film. Throughout the course, students will question the construction of individual and collective identities in film, focusing on the intersections of cultural factors such as gender, race and ethnicity, social class, and language, among others. Students will also focus on the ideological substructures involved in the shaping and conforming of those identities by cultural institutions and social systems. Students will also learn vocabulary and techniques for analyzing the formal aspects of film as well as film narrative.
SPN 472
LITERATURE OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC
Graduate
This advanced course will explore cultural diversity and the Dominican Republic political, gender and ethnic visions through poetry. Through poetic class experience students will decode culture and society in the Caribbean and U.S. Dominican Latino communities. Students will focus on the following issues: political representations of identity; representations of gender and the cultural readings of "machismo"; the role of art and other forms of cultural expression in shaping identity; cultural criticism of poems as a way to understand culture and the politics of marginality and forms of political mobilization.

SPN 473
AFRO-HISPANIC LITERATURE
Graduate
This course in contemporary literature will seek to determine what distinguishes the Afro-Hispanic novel, short story, drama or poetry from other works in these genres written in Spanish from a variety of perspectives and may have different topics each quarter. Students will read original works in order to analyze how the use of language, imagery and narrative voice reflect the experience of people of African descent in the Spanish-speaking world as seen (or heard) in the text and context of these works. In addition, students will explore how race, class, politics and culture interact and find expression in Afro-Hispanic literature.

SPN 474
LITERATURE OF THE CONQUEST
Graduate
This advanced course in Latin American literature explores the early encounters between Europe and the Americas. Students will analyze letters, reports, histories, and political tracts from European, Amerindian, and Mestizo sources. Students will also consider some visual documents, such as images from the Lienzo de Tlaxcala and early maps. Typical areas of focus include the initial contact (Columbus), Mexico (Cortes, Diaz del Castillo, the Florentine Codex), Peru (Xerez, "El Inca" Garcilaso, Guaman Poma de Ayala), and the sixteenth-century debates over the wars of conquest (Las Casas, Sepulveda). Topics include the role of these texts as instruments of empire, strategies of representation, strategies of resistance to imperialism, the role of women in the conquest, debates over what constitutes a "just" war, and the relevance of these texts for modern Latin American identities.

SPN 475
LATIN AMERICAN LITERATURE FROM INDEPENDENCE TO MODERNISM
Graduate
This advanced course in Spanish literature will introduce students to the most important literary movements in Hispanic American countries, beginning with the wars of independence from Spain until the last part of 19th century. Special attention will be given to authors such as Jose Marti, Jorge Issacs, Andres Bello and Ruben Dario, among others.

SPN 476
SOR JUANA INES DE LA CRUZ
Graduate
This advanced course in literature will explore the main works of the most influential Mexican poet of the Colonial period, Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz (1648-1695). One of the major themes in Sor Juana's work is the right of women to education. Sor Juana wrote poetry, plays, and essays in seventeenth-century Mexico, a society in which women's intellectual inquiry and access to knowledge was an unsafe endeavor and controlled by patriarchal hierarchies. Students will examine the relationship between politics, gender and writing in the context of the historical period, and analyze the spaces and borders occupied and visited by Sor Juana's lyric, ludic, astronomical, polemical, theatrical, theological, cosmological, culinary, colonial, and criollo writings.

SPN 477
PERUVIAN REALITIES IN A MULTICULTURAL SOCIETY: HISTORY, CULTURE, POLITICS, VIOLENCE & SOCIAL JUSTICE
Graduate
This interdisciplinary course will introduce students to the history, culture, politics, and general life of the peoples of Peru. Through an exploration of a vast array of interdisciplinary readings, visual arts and films, students will gain a deep understanding of Peru's history from its extraordinarily pre-Columbian civilizations to its citizens? twenty-first century post civil war struggles to achieve dignity and justice in a multicultural, multilingual and multiethnic nation where Andean, Amazonian, African, Asian and European traditions meet. As a consequence of immense economic and social inequalities, Peru has a long history of violence. This resulted in an internal war that ended ten years ago. Particular attention will be given to contemporary developments in terms of the interaction between culture and politics. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism/Literature category #4 (Latin American literature from Modernism to present).
New Course Description: This advanced course in Latin American literature explores the relationship of national consolidation and romantic novels. This course is based on the reading, discussion and critique of major representative "Foundational Fictions" in 19th century Latin American literature. Students will examine how the construction of gender and race in these novels portrays the quest to forge new national identity/ies. At the same time, students will analyze how the novels use their characters' romantic relationships to suggest their nation's political relationships, and thus contribute to the discourse on building the new society/ies that would replace Spain's colonial empire and serve as a prototype for the modern Latin American state. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism).

A heritage language learner has been described as "a student who is raised in a home where a non-English language is spoken, who speaks or merely understands the heritage language, and who is to some degree bilingual in English and the heritage language" (Valdes 2000:1). It is well-documented that for such students, literacy in the heritage language is often lost within just one or two generations. In this third course of DePaul's series on Latino Literacy, students will identify the prominent sociolinguistic issues that intersect with heritage language literacy. Through the reading of selected bibliography and guided reflections on both personal and service learning experiences, each student will arrive at a personalized assessment of the key topics affecting heritage language literacy. Possible topics include language socialization, language ideology and identities, and issues related to language contact with English such as code-switching and language shift/loss.

This course explores the overarching theme of violence across different Latin American social realities. This course uses an interdisciplinary approach to explore the experience of revolution and repression in contemporary Latin America. Focusing on twentieth-century literature, films and culture, students will explore the making and unmaking of revolutionary political projects and human rights issues, the construction of distinct forms of cultural resistance and the different expressions of violence.

Supervised practice in language instruction, paired with a mentor instructor in a beginning or intermediate language course. Students observe a class, teach a lesson or lessons, assist in assessment and lesson planning, and complete individualized assignments to develop their skills as classroom language instructors. Repeatable.

See schedule for current offerings.

Variable credit.
STEM 230
INTRODUCTION TO EARTH AND SPACE SCIENCE
Undergraduate
This course provides an overview of the dynamic geological nature of Earth, its place in the solar system and universe, and the fundamental Earth-sky-human relationship. The format of the course is lecture, discussion, laboratory activities, and student group presentations. The course content is aligned with the Illinois Earth and Space Science Content Area Standards for educators and thus also meets the needs of secondary education majors wishing to pass the Illinois state exam for certification in earth and space science. LSP 120 or HON 180 is recommended. Formerly SDV 230.

STEM 231
INTRODUCTION TO EARTH AND SPACE SCIENCE (WITHOUT LAB)
Undergraduate
This course provides an overview of the dynamic geological nature of Earth, its place in the solar system and universe, and the fundamental Earth-sky-human relationship. Students will develop an understanding of 1) the processes that shape Earth's surface and interior over geologic time, 2) the formation, evolution, and physical properties of the sun and its planets, asteroids, and comets, 3) the physical basis for phenomena such as eclipses, phases, and seasons, 4) the formation, evolution, and properties of stars, galaxies, and the universe, 5) the historical progression of human understanding of Earth's geologic history and its place in space and time, and 6) the associated technologies that have enabled this progression. Students will encounter several historical examples that illustrate the provisional nature of science and the interaction of experiment, observation, and theory. The format of the course is lectures, discussions, laboratory activities, and student group presentations. Formerly SDV 231.

STEM 240
SCIENCE AT THE EDGE OF SPACE
Undergraduate
Earth's atmosphere and near-space environment play an increasingly important role in our lives in areas such as global warming, ozone depletion, and telecommunications. The upper atmosphere is also a starting point for human exploration of space beyond Earth. In addition to learning about Earth's upper atmosphere and beyond, students will build simple scientific experiments and launch them on a weather balloon to an altitude of 100,000 feet. Formerly SDV 240.

STEM 310
SCIENTIFIC MODELING
Undergraduate
Introduction to mathematical models used in scientific work: discrete dynamical systems, continuous models, stochastic models, Markov chains, and compartment models. Course is example-driven, with models being implemented on the computer. MAT 151 recommended. Formerly SDV 310.

MAT 150 or LSP 120 and 121 are a prerequisite for this class.

STEM 360
SCIENTIFIC DATA ANALYSIS I
Undergraduate
Descriptive methods of data analysis, probability models, statistical inferential procedures including regression and analysis of variance, especially as it relates to scientific data arising from observations and experiments. Includes the use of one or more computer statistical analysis packages. MAT 150 recommended. Formerly SDV 360.

STEM 361
SCIENTIFIC DATA ANALYSIS II
Undergraduate
Advanced statistical and data-mining methods with science-related case studies. Topics include multiple regression, logistic regression, decision trees, and naive Bayesian classification. STEM 360 recommended. Formerly SDV 361.

STEM 390
SENIOR CAPSTONE I
Undergraduate
Students will examine a scientific issue with historical or public policy significance from multiple points of view, ethical, social, as well as scientific. The topic will necessarily be one in which the interpretation and visualization of data plays a significant role in framing debate. Students will work individually or in small groups to create projects featuring the interplay of quantitative and non-quantitative approaches. STEM 361 recommended. Formerly SDV 390.
STEM 391
SENIOR CAPSTONE II
Undergraduate
Students work on a quarter-length project whose end product is either a detailed mathematical analysis or a visualization of several large scientific data sets. The project will integrate a few of the science topics done in SDV 390 with data analysis and visualization. Collaborations with researchers and organizations such as educational institutions and museums are especially encouraged. Formerly SDV 391.

STEM 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
Variable credit. Formerly SDV 399.

STEM 405
ECOLOGY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
This course provides a broad survey of ecological principles through laboratory and field investigations appropriate in an urban setting. The course focus is on the use of local environments to promote awareness of and appreciation for the complexity, diversity and structure of the natural world while developing skills in hypothesis testing, experimental design and data analysis. Formerly SDV 405.

STEM 409
MATHEMATICAL METHODS FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL SCIENCE TEACHERS
Graduate
This course develops the mathematical methods that support the teaching of science at the middle school level: proportional reasoning, rates, exponents and scientific notation, graphing, and elementary modeling. The course incorporates the use of technology such as calculators and spreadsheets for scientific analysis.

STEM 410
TOPICS FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Selected topics in science and science education. Formerly SDV 410.

STEM 411
FOUNDATIONS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE I
Graduate
This course explores the nature of scientific inquiry, using a historical case study of the development of classical physics in the work of Copernicus, Brahe, Kepler, Galileo, and Newton. It explores the roles of observation, classification, experiments, theory, and mathematical models in science as well as the character of scientific change. Formerly SDV 411.

STEM 412
FOUNDATIONS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE II
Graduate
Fundamental concepts of physics examined quantitatively: velocity, acceleration, surface area, volume, density. Elementary modeling for data analysis, including spreadsheets and data acquisition software. Scaling of physical quantities. Formerly SDV 412.

STEM 413
LIGHT AND WAVES
Graduate
Fundamentals of wave motion with application to light, water, and sound. Teachers are introduced to a variety of physical science topics in the curriculum as well as an example of the extraordinary unifying power of physics concepts such as waves. Formerly SDV 413.

STEM 420
CHEMISTRY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
The structure and composition of matter. Physical and chemical change, examined from conceptual viewpoints which include atomic theory, stoichiometry, periodicity, bonding, equilibrium, thermodynamics and kinetics. Formerly SDV 420.
STEM 421
CELL BIOLOGY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
This course focuses on the chemical and cellular nature of living organisms, cell structure and function, and heredity. Enzymes, the movement of materials across membranes, photosynthesis, respiration, cell division, and basic genetics. Formerly SDV 421.

STEM 422
EVOLUTION AND DIVERSITY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
This course explores the subjects of biological evolution and species diversity. Topics covered include the history of our understandings of the origin and nature of species, mechanisms that produce evolutionary change, geographic variation and speciation, current theories and evidence of life’s origin and the history of life on earth. Controversies in biological evolution, both scientific and cultural will be discussed. Formerly SDV 422.

STEM 423
PLANT AND ANIMAL BIOLOGY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
This course focuses on the structure and function of living organisms. Students will investigate how different organisms solve common problems of food acquisition, digestion and the distribution of nutrients, waste removal, gas exchange, maintenance of homeostasis and reproduction. While this course examines the diversity of living forms, there is a special emphasis on the structure and function of the human body. Formerly SDV 423.

STEM 425
TOPICS IN LIFE SCIENCES FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Diverse topics in Life Sciences appropriate for middle school and high school students.

STEM 430
ASTROBIOLOGY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Astrobiology focuses on basic questions such as: How does life of any kind begin and develop? Does life exist elsewhere in the universe? What are the environmental limits for life? What is the future of life on the earth and beyond? The course reviews the origin and evolution of life on Earth and goes on to examine the prospects of habitats capable of supporting life in our solar system, and the potential for planets and life to exist orbiting other stars. Students will work with NASA remote sensing data of the earth, the other planets, and their moons. Formerly SDV 430.

STEM 431
ASTRONOMY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
This course emphasizes astronomy particularly relevant to the middle school science curriculum. The structure of the solar system, motion of the sun, phases of the moon, familiarity with the night sky, stellar structure and evolution, galaxies, and introduction to cosmology. Students will be familiarized with student reading materials particularly appropriate for the combined teaching of science and reading. Students will make observations and use sky simulation software. Formerly SDV 431.

STEM 432
GEOLOGY AND PLANETARY SCIENCE FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Planetary formation and evolution. Plate tectonics and the rock cycle, including volcanism, planetary interiors, weathering, sedimentation, and metamorphism. Formerly SDV 432.

STEM 440
HEAT AND ENERGY FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Concept of energy, its nature, forms, and transfer with applications to physical science and earth science. Definition of energy in terms of work, potential and kinetic energy, conservation of energy, thermal energy, solar energy, energy in earth systems. Formerly SDV 440.
STEM 441
WEATHER AND CLIMATE FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
Basic physical and chemical processes that shape weather and climate. Solar radiation and the seasons, composition and structure of the atmosphere, atmospheric processes, human effects, historical and contemporary climate change. This course emphasizes quantitative methods. Formerly SDV 441.

STEM 442
ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE FOR TEACHERS
Graduate
A general introduction to the scientific background of some of the most important environmental problems facing urban areas, the nation and the world. Population dynamics, water and energy resources, ecosystem degradation, extinction and the loss of biodiversity, and climate change. The course will include a field observation and experiment.

STEM 490
SCIENCE TEACHING CAPSTONE
Graduate
Teachers will further examine current research on how students at the middle school level learn science concepts and conduct an action research project involving science teaching. STEM 405, STEM 412, STEM 413 and six content courses recommended. Formerly SDV 490.

STEM 698
TOPICS FOR MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE TEACHERS
Graduate
Diverse topics in teaching and learning of mathematics and science. These courses are designed for current and future teachers.

STEM 699
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Variable credit. Formerly SDV 699.

SUD 401
SUSTAINABLE URBAN DEVELOPMENT I: PLANNING, POLICY & COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course addresses the concepts, practices, and tools for sustainable planning and provides an understanding for how to apply these to urban communities. The course is an intensive, topics-based overview of sustainable land use, housing, transportation, infrastructure, and community and economic development practices. The course is largely directed at contemporary policy issues and technical processes within the United States.

SUD 402
SUSTAINABLE URBAN DEVELOPMENT II: GREEN INFRASTRUCTURE & THE ENVIRONMENT
Graduate
This class focuses on the environmental aspects of city planning, including: resource management, environmental policy, transportation, LEED ratings and measures of environmental impact, integration of ecosystems within a land use planning framework, and community-based solutions to historical environmental injustice.

SUD 403
BROWNFIELDS REDEVELOPMENT: PRACTICE AND IMPLEMENTATION
Graduate
Students form a grounded understanding of the Brownfield lifecycle: how and why they were created and the general processes governing their redevelopment. The class will review the current regulatory, economic, environmental, community, public health, and development conditions of brownfields, through site visits and, when possible, discussions with stakeholders from public agencies, community organizations, and the private sector. Through a practice component, class members work in teams to apply their general brownfields knowledge to particular challenges in the field and gain hands-on experience in applied environmental and economic development research and analysis, community brownfield practices, and sustainability planning.
SUD 404
URBAN DESIGN LABORATORY
Graduate
This course teaches digital methods of creating visual information. Software used may include: Adobe Creative Suite, Google SketchUp, and advanced techniques for Microsoft PowerPoint, which can be applied by students in the SUD 501 and 502 courses.

SPECIAL TOPICS
Graduate
A course related to sustainable urban development.

SUD 499
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Intensive study of a topic of special interest; requires that the student and instructor work together independently on a specific topic or project. Instructor consent required.

SUD 501
PROFESSIONAL INTERNSHIP
Graduate
A 100-hr internship with one of the following: a local government, non-profit organization, or private corporation. Students are encouraged to work onsite, integrating their learning into a Chicago-area organization. Students unable to identify an internship will be assisted by the Steans Center for Community-based Service Learning, the Chaddick Institute, and other DePaul resources.

SUD 502
CAPSTONE - PROFESSIONAL PORTFOLIO
Graduate
A discussion seminar that puts the skills learned on site into the wider academic context of the course. Students will draw from their internship to complete a project report as the culmination of this course.

SUD 600
CANDIDACY CONTINUATION
Graduate
Students who must take extra time to complete the requirements for the Master's portfolio must enroll in candidacy continuation each quarter of the academic year until this Master's requirement has been completed. Students may register for this course by permission of the graduate director and no more than three times. Non-credit.

SUD 601
CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE
Graduate
Masters candidates who are not actively working on a portfolio during a given quarter but who want to maintain active university status can register for this course by permission of the graduate director. This course does not maintain student status for purposes of student loans. Non-credit.

SW 105
INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
In this Bridge course, students will learn about personal computing by exploring Windows Vista operating systems, including an introduction to common personal computer productivity applications software using MS Office 2007. Students will learn the basic, intermediate, and advanced level of MS Word, Excel, Power Point, and Access. They will also explore home networks and wireless systems, developing basic technical skills in designing, managing, and securing home networks. May be taken for a maximum of 3 competences.
SW 106
MIND, BRAIN, CONSCIOUSNESS: THE MIND AND BIOTECH REVOLUTION
Undergraduate
What is so special about the mind? Why is brain-death the death of the human? What is consciousness and how do we define it? Does artificial intelligence actually exist or is this a construct of the technologists? In this Bridge course, we will examine questions about the mind-body division, right brain-left brain distinctions, the differences between robots and humans, and how the brain processes information and sensory data. We will use both biotechnology research and artistic experience to explore these questions. Can be taken for up to 3 competences.

SW 121
INTERNET APPLICATIONS FOR SMALL BUSINESSES
Undergraduate
This course examines the design and development of web applications for small business. The course focuses on Internet technology to support consumer-oriented e-commerce, enterprise e-business solutions, and emerging business-to-business trading models. The topics will cover e-business models, internet marketing, online transactions ethical and social issues and internet security. Students will study different models for e-commerce applications and build a web application for small business using HTML, VB Script and Active Server Page.

SW 126
S5 / EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING EVALUATION: INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
S5 Information Technology. Can use contemporary information technology effectively.

SW 141
MARINE ECOSYSTEMS
Undergraduate
This course focuses on the biology and ecology of marine ecosystems and oceanography. The biological, chemical, physical and geographical factors of marine ecosystems are explored, including the inter-tidal zones, sandy and rocky shores, the ocean floor, seagrass, mangroves, coral reefs, open ocean, and the abyss. A survey of the biodiversity of marine organisms includes algae, plankton, invertebrates, reptiles, birds, fishes and mammals. Behavioral characteristics of unique species are discussed. The impact of humans on the marine environment, conservation, and management are highlighted. A theme of sustainability runs throughout. Discussion and activities will be emphasized.

SW 142
EVOLUTION: THEN & NOW
Undergraduate
This course is a survey of the biological theory of evolution and the study of evolutionary processes. Major topics include a history of evolutionary studies, fossil evidence, embryology, comparative anatomy, skull structure, molecular evaluation, mathematical theory, the basic mechanisms for evolution, basic genetics, the origin and history of life, and primate evolution. Special topics include the origins and maintenance of biodiversity, an examination of the role of humans in the extinction of other species, and the effects of climate change on evolution. A theme of sustainability runs throughout. Discussion and activities will be emphasized.

SW 152
STRESS REDUCTION USING HUMOR AND SPIRITUALITY
Undergraduate
Stress affects the body in dramatic ways, and is a major contributing factor in chronic and degenerative diseases. We will understand/describe the physiology and biochemistry of stress and, more importantly, apply effective methods to reduce and manage it. Effective stress reduction and burnout prevention then become important health, wellness, productivity and disease prevention strategies for individuals, schools, businesses, the medical industry and the culture. The effective stress reduction techniques include breathing, biofeedback, humor, spiritual exploration, connection and inspiration. The holistic paradigm of body, mind and spirit supports our informed search for meaning, connection, calm productivity and enhanced health.

SW 153
SCIENCE FOR CITIZENS
Undergraduate
Students will learn basic knowledge of science as they engage in activities that are connected to their everyday life. They will explore their natural ecosystem and be able to describe various functions. They will engage in the scientific method through observations, hypotheses, data collection and basic data analysis. Students will apply their critical thinking based on the scientific method to local environmental or science related issues/events.
SW 160
CLIMATE AND CLIMATE CHANGE
Undergraduate
Climate impacts every moment of our lives. We are, in fact, dependent for survival upon climatic conditions remaining within certain rather narrow ranges of the possible variation. However, for the past ten millennia climate has been comfortable enough to permit the rise (and fall) of many civilizations. Climate stability over the last 4,500 years has permitted us to invent cities and engage in agriculture and hydraulic engineering, science, and many other activities which we recognize as civilized and like to think of as advances. However, in an extremely short period of time, only two centuries, we have reached a stage of interaction with the climate which jeopardizes the very regularities in climate on which we depend. In order to understand what our options are we must learn to understand the climate system within large interacting frameworks of geography, geology, chemistry, physics, and ecology over long spans of time. This level of complexity urgently calls on us humans for an exploration of a robust Earth-oriented ethic. In this course we will build from simple observations to more complex understandings and the exploration of possible futures with scenario thinking. We will engage in discussion around lectures illustrated with power point, texts, and current developments reported in scientific journals, contemporary press, and on the web.

SW 175
CAREGIVING AND WELLNESS
Undergraduate
Who takes care of the family caregiver? All of us at one time or another inevitably face the challenge of either being a caregiver for a child, sibling, partner or parent, supporting another family member in this role, or caring for ourselves. This human experience can be overwhelming and affects the caregiver's mental, emotional, spiritual and physical well-being. It is well-documented that this role can take an emotional toll. Although caregiving can be very rewarding, it can also be a difficult experience plagued with stress, fear, anxiety, depression and isolation. These factors add strain to all members of the family and can either threaten our health or compound an existing health condition. Students review the implications of being a caregiver, develop a plan, learn to recognize health-threatening symptoms, identify support systems and prepare to be proactive in finding solutions to remain healthy while they face any life challenge. This course also teaches students how to overcome obstacles and practice relaxation techniques. The final paper may consist of writing a personal health plan to maintain optimal health or a plan for how to remain a healthy family caregiver.

SW 193
THE SCIENCE OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION
Undergraduate
This course will engage you in scientific inquiry on the nature of sexual orientation. You will be challenged to master the scientific content of leading programs of research on twins, brain and other anatomical structures, hormones, genetic linkages, birth-order, and animal behavior through assigned readings, lectures, and multimedia resources. Moreover, you will also engage in the scientific process through a collaborative research project concerning an aspect of sexual orientation that leads you through the steps of stating a question, designing a study, collecting and analyzing data, and interpreting the results. You will also develop skills in identifying the limits to particular forms of scientific inquiry by recognizing the constraints of methods, sources of bias, reliability of results, and certainty of conclusions. This course will encourage you to place the modern research within ethical and social contexts in which to make judgments about the potential relevance and impacts of scientific knowledge about sexual orientation.

SW 195
ELEMENTS OF ALGEBRA
Undergraduate
This course provides an introduction to the use of algebra. Students will begin by exploring arithmetic and plane geometry skills including fractions, decimals, percentages, and metrics. When ready for algebra, the class will learn to manipulate equations. The emphasis will be placed on building confidence in solving everyday problems through algebra. Although the course will move to complex and simultaneous equations, the focus will remain on algebra basics and their applications. You may register for up to 2 competencies.

SW 201
WEB PAGE DESIGN
Undergraduate
With so many people jumping on the web publishing bandwagon, you can easily feel like you've been left in the dust. Today, people are cranking out publications with worldwide distribution and impact as a result of web publication software. This course is designed for webpage content creators and aims to give you the skills needed to build basic pages on the internet.

SW 202
WEB PAGE DEVELOPMENT AND DESIGN
Undergraduate
This course describes the tools and techniques needed to design a web site for personal and professional use. We will cover the fundamentals of web site design practices, HTML, forms, image creation and editing, and Javascript through lecture, discussion, lab and homework. Students will complete a series of exercises that lead toward building a functional web site using these tools and techniques. Successful completion of Exploring the Internet is required to register.
SW 203
STATISTICS FOR USE
Undergraduate
This course is designed for students who, for their careers or further academic studies, need to cover quantitative and numerical skills. Topics will include the center and risk associated with financial data, identifying trends and making predictions for economic and scientific data, measuring the likelihood of an occurrence in a game of chance, or even estimating a political candidate's chances based on polls. Examples will be used to introduce and reinforce theory. The student will build confidence and learn to solve practical problems by using statistics. Some facility with algebra is required.

SW 204
URBAN GROWTH AROUND THE GLOBE
Undergraduate
This course will analyze the interrelationships among population, the environment, and economics. Past, current, and potential future policies relative to these issues will be evaluated.

SW 205
PRACTICAL ALGEBRA
Undergraduate
This course covers algebraic concepts and computational skills ranging from basic variable representation to solving equations and deriving/using advanced mathematical formulas to solve financial problems. The basic skills needed for comprehension will be reviewed as each new concept is introduced. Calculators will be used throughout the course. A scientific calculator with the "log" function is the most useful.

SW 206
NUTRITION AND BIOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
Today's consumers want and need to be educated about taking charge of their own health. With the current fast-paced world that has spilled over into our eating habits, food choices have become unlimited. Choosing a healthful approach to diet requires basic information about our body's nutritional needs. The greater our understanding of our basic bodily needs, the better we are able to make choices concerning our health. This course will offer an overview of the basic science of nutrition, with an emphasis on the relationship between disease and nutrition, and current research findings.

SW 207
PUBLIC HEALTH ISSUES IN AFRICA
Undergraduate
Public health issues have an impact on any ministry in which a student might serve. This course will build students' capacities to understand the scientific information that explains public health issues such as HIV/AIDS, malaria and other infectious diseases. They will learn about health care practices and strategies that can be used to address public health issues, especially in their ministries. They will examine cultural and gender dimensions of public health issues. Through this course, therefore, students will develop and demonstrate their competence to describe, categorize, and analyze the interactions and exchanges between living organisms and their physical environments and to assess health care practices based on an understanding of the biological and social factors that contribute to definitions of health.

SW 208
ISSUES IN SCIENCE AND RELIGION
Undergraduate
This course develops students' understandings of the scientific and religious constructions of self in the modern world (natural and social). The institutions and bodies of knowledge comprising science, religion, and their overlap are critically analyzed. Key historic debates are examined, for example: the Vatican's trial of Galileo for his teachings of a heliocentric universe; the controversial reception of Darwin's theory of evolution; and the 2001 U.S. policy on embryonic stem cell research. Through such analyses, the course develops students' skills in making ethically-informed decisions and thus recognizing their roles in the public debates involving the intersection of science and religion.
SW 209
BIODIVERSITY
Undergraduate
The study of biological diversity, which is the measurement of the amount of genetic, species and ecological variation on earth, is emerging as one of science's and society's most important and urgent endeavors. Scientific efforts to study biodiversity have intensified because of our growing appreciation of the pivotal roles human population growth and urbanization play in accelerating the extinction of plant and animal species through the destruction of critical habitats. In this course, we will examine the central questions: How is the security of humanity dependent on the perpetuation of biological diversity? Do we have an obligation to future generations to keep life on the planet as diverse as possible? Since life on earth has been evolving and diversifying for at least 3.8 billion years and most of the diversity that once existed (as much as 99%) has been lost to extinction processes, we will focus on the character and causes of earth's past biodiversity crises in order to critically assess the severity of the current "biodiversity crisis." Students will be introduced to major biodiversity issues through discussions, readings, lectures, labs, field trips, and original inquiry. Subjects will include: the ways different cultures view the biosphere, biodiversity measurements and monitoring, biodiversity trends in earth's geologic past, the value of and human dependence on biodiversity, global and regional biodiversity currently at risk, policies to protect biodiversity ("the regulation of extinction"), the role of science and technology in preserving biodiversity, restoration ecology and ecological economics. Students will develop a detailed research paper, adhering to a scientific reasoning format, on a biodiversity issue of their choice.

SW 210
ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES OF THE 21ST CENTURY
Undergraduate
Have you ever wanted to enhance your environmental awareness locally, nationally, and internationally? Do you ponder your impact on the earth's natural resources? Students will explore environmental quality, sustainability, natural resources, water, soil, and air quality, global warming, and human interactions with the environment. A series of discussions, activities, guest speakers, debates, oral presentations, and computer modeling exercises will offer concept comprehension as well as insight in improving environmental quality. At the end of the course students will reflect on ways to improve environmental quality individually and as a community.

SW 211
USING INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY EFFECTIVELY
Undergraduate
Dealing with change has become essential for all of us, in our private lives and in our organizations and businesses. For some people, change is a stimulating adventure. For others, it is painfully anxiety-provoking. Yet the reality of today's business world is that no one can avoid change. The implementation of information technology in the workplace results in complex changes and poses challenges for supervisors and employees. In this course, we will examine issues regarding the individual and social aspects of implementing information technology in work and community. We will explore questions of access to and control of information technology, and concerns for individual privacy. The students will be exposed to a variety of conceptual frameworks and perspective that they may use for interpreting problems and managing change related to integrating computer technology into social systems of work. We will explore each framework or perspective by applying it to case studies. We will reflect on the effectiveness and shortcomings of each interpretive perspective.

SW 212
URBAN ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE
Undergraduate
The study of environmental science uncovers the relationship between the built environment and the natural processes of the earth. This includes human interactions and the impact on habitats, plants, animals and those non-living entities that we rely on such as water, air and soil. An examination of the dynamics of human population growth and migration, food production and climate issues, chemical toxicology and health, waste and sustainability, energy production and consumption will illustrate how these issues are connected by increasing global urbanization. This course will provide the framework to guide your decisions as a consumer and a citizen in both a global and local environment. Role-playing and discussions on everything from the choices of fabrics for clothes, transportation, animal rights to the amount of water used while brushing your teeth will show the connections of your behavior to global consequences. Through reading, research, writing, class discussion, individual and group projects, students will learn the key to a sustainable future.

SW 213
MEASURING GLOBAL CLIMATE CHANGE
Undergraduate
In this course we will view global climate change from several angles and through various lenses. What happened to climate during the last 800 million years? What happened since the beginning of the industrial revolution? We'll evaluate predictions and prescriptions for the future. We'll consider politics, economics, and human beliefs and behaviors as they relate to the current global warming trend. Topics for study can range from one person's daily decisions about tooth-brushing or commuting, up to larger issues such as "Why did nearly 200 countries, but not the U.S., ratify the Kyoto Protocol?" or "What happens to Europe, and the rest of us, if the Atlantic Ocean Gulf Stream stalls out?" Doing a major paper or project for each chosen competence will allow you to focus on whatever aspects of global climate change you find most compelling. The overall goal is to become more informed, and to act more responsibly, about Earth, its living organisms and climates, and our influences on them.
SW 214
OUTCOME ORIENTED COMMUNICATION
Undergraduate
Businesses are run by people who work in a constantly changing communication and organizational environment. Modern communication involves many types of communication media such as written reports, telephone, email, websites, text messaging, online conferencing and face-to-face meetings. All of these communication media are not equal when addressing business problems and using the wrong communication media for specific types of problems can actually create problems that were not there in the first place. The “Outcome Oriented Communication” method covered in this class presents communication as a proactive tool for avoiding problems instead of as a remediation tool for correcting problems that might have been avoided with proper communication. It was developed by the instructor in conjunction with his consulting, academic and professional work. Students will be encouraged to use their “life as a laboratory” during the duration of this course as a way of testing the concepts against their own reality, finishing the course with a much better understanding of how to adapt their personal communication style to different personal and business problem solving situations.

SW 215
STRESS MANAGEMENT FOR HEALTH AND WELLNESS
Undergraduate
This course will explore the effect of stress upon the physiology of the body and offer a variety of alternative methods to alleviate these symptoms. Students will gain an understanding of the body’s stress response mechanisms and how this response when not checked can lead to consequences that diminish the quality of life. Students will learn techniques for activating the body’s relaxation response mechanisms. We will explore the theoretical and practical application of relaxation techniques such as controlled breathing, meditation, self-massage, biofeedback, Yoga, Tai Chi and other alternative health practices. The importance of nutrition as a means of combating stress will also be covered. Through experiencing the physiological response of the body to stress reduction techniques, students will gain the ability to assess and manage their own stress. Other skills students will be able to acquire include: recognizing stress symptoms in self and others, how to choose a stress reduction method, understanding the relationship between stress and wellness, and devising stress reduction regimes for others. Journaling, a short paper, selected readings and demonstration of advanced Yoga and Tai Chi techniques by a guest speaker will enhance the learning experience.

SW 216
THE SCIENCE AND COMMERCE OF COFFEE AND TEA
Undergraduate
The class will use a variety of readings, discussions, and activities to explore the science and economics of popular hot beverages. This class will focus on the science behind growing and brewing coffees and teas (and tisanes) and the effect of these beverages on the human body. Coffees, in particular, teas and tisane elements less so, are grown in highly specific ecosystems. The class will learn about and compare these ecosystems, earth-friendlier alternative ecosystems for these commodities and common forest ecosystems that are found in Northern Illinois. The class will also look at the historic and current state of coffee and tea commerce. The class will include field trips to locations such as: local orchards, area coffee houses, area organic food stores, teahouses, etc. Some of these trips will be during regularly scheduled class time and others may be assigned as independent student work outside of class. WARNING: Basic taste testing during the class will focus on coffee and tea without additions. While students will have many opportunities to review popular, flavored coffee and tea drinks, in-class taste tests will focus on unadulterated coffee and tea comparisons. Students must be willing to sample espressos and coffees black.

SW 217
UNDERSTANDING AND MEASURING INTELLIGENCE
Undergraduate
In this course, students examine intelligence testing and its uses in employee selection and placement. Students learn the principles of assessing human traits (reliability, validity, bias and other systematic errors), and apply them to intelligence testing. We will work to define “intelligence” and consider various approaches to intelligence, contrasting the theories of unitary vs. multiple intelligences. Students will examine the implications of the definitions and measurement approaches on different groups of people, both historically and currently, with attention to the unintended effects of the biases of test developers and the ethical implications of different approaches and uses of intelligence testing.

SW 218
WHAT IT MEANS TO BE HUMAN
Undergraduate
Self-awareness distinguishes humans from other species of animals and allows us to raise questions about ourselves. This course will examine the works of Freud, Jung, Adler, Skinner, Maslow, and others. Emphasis will be placed on the evolution of questions as well as answers in personality theories. Through readings, lectures, videos, discussions, and written assignments, students will examine the application of the scientific process to themselves and others.
SW 219
THE AGING (OR REENGAGING) BRAIN?
Undergraduate
In this course, we will examine the latest research on the aging process and, specifically, its relationship to the brain. We will cover a mix of material from psychological and, especially, neuroscientific fields. Students will also be introduced to the field of neuroplasticity, which is revolutionizing the way we understand the functioning power of the brain. Neuroplasticity, in simple terms, is the brain's ability to rearrange its connections and, therefore, its functions based on experiences. In other words, the brain has the capacity to literally change itself, based on experiences, to achieve positive results. The goals of this course are to understand how the brain works, examine its impact on our daily actions, study how aging impacts brain functioning, discover the learning and adjustment potential of the brain, and apply the principles of the 3 P's. We will use numerous examples to understand the brain, including health, work, relational, and personal settings. Students will ultimately answer the question of whether they will have an aging or reengaging brain.

SW 220
COSMIC HISTORY: FROM BIG BANG TO MANY UNIVERSES
Undergraduate
This course invites students to enter into some of the universe's most mysterious spaces, especially black holes, red shifts, and tenth dimensions. Scientific studies of the cosmos have reached a remarkable level of consensus, but mysteries continue to boggle astrophysicists' minds. Einstein's Theory of General Relativity, Hubble's "Big Bang," and subsequent theories regarding dark energy, dark matter, black holes, and other features of cosmic history are now supported by a growing body of evidence from studies of background radiation, "red shifts," and other astrophysical data. But puzzles remain that compel the boldest of thinkers to reconsider the physics of both the cosmic and the subatomic. This course invites students to engage in critical analyses of twentieth-century developments in the science of cosmic history, its creative process, and its movement toward connecting diverse aspects of the universe within a Grand Unified Theory.

SW 221
BUILDING AN ONLINE CATALOG OF CHICAGO ACTIVISM
Undergraduate
This class will chart, categorize, and record all the civic activism and social change organizations working in Chicago and post mini-profiles to a Wikipedia space that the general public will be able to search by type of issue and neighborhood. This publishing project will grow with each class's contributions and will allow viewers to post comments and add links and other resources. Students will be provided with information about the types of community change organizations working in Chicago and will then have a choice of assignments such as the following: research groups within a specific setting (e.g. recycling); research groups working in a specific community (e.g. Lawndale); research a hero/heroine of social change (e.g. Gail Cincotta); or research a specific incident in Chicago's social change history (e.g. The Haymarket Riot). Students will also work on the user interface and conduct user experience tests to see how casual viewers use the site. Viewers on the site will be able to browse the organizations by type of issue and neighborhood. This reference will be a significant resource for citizens who want to make a difference in Chicago.

SW 222
WEB SITE DESIGN
Undergraduate
Designing a web site, for personal or professional use, requires a number of skills. This course serves as an introduction to the tools and methods for creating effective web sites. Students will learn the fundamentals of HTML, forms, image creation and editing, and JavaScript through exercises which will lead to the creation of a functional web site by the end of the course. In addition to these practical skills, the course will also discuss the effective design practices for a successful web site. Successful completion of "Exploring the Internet" course, familiarity with Windows, ability to use a word processor, and some experience using the Internet are recommended.

SW 223
PRINCIPLES OF A SUSTAINABLE LIFESTYLE
Undergraduate
Our consumer choices, habits and lifestyle have a local and global impact. The items we consume, such as housing, furnishings, clothing, transportation, travel, food, recreation, entertainment, and disposables mainly come from non-renewable natural resources produced in far away lands and have a cradle-to-grave lifecycle. Awareness and education as to the safety and efficacy of consumer products is often suspect with contradicting information from the media, manufacturers, government and advocacy groups. Employing a sustainable paradigm for all of your consumer choices will allow you to have a smaller footprint, (ecological and carbon) on the planet and live a healthier, guilt free existence. We will explore the meaning of the "triple bottom line" or cradle to cradle approach to consumption. Consumer models, field trips and personal experiments will help pave the way to become a conscientious global citizen.
SW 224
ENVIRONMENTAL SOCIOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course opens the discussion of the relationships and conflicts of society's perception of the built and natural landscape. It crosses the intersection of technology and industry and their resulting social problems. The study of society includes the phenomena of equity and inequality that beset humans and the living and non-living components that we experience daily. The act of consumption and the economy of technology, over time, impact human populations, mold our social experiences, and inform the actions that determine the physical environment in which we live. Ideologies, cultural, moral and ethical values present risk and knowledge that hone the attitudes and actions within our human communities. Humans, often being pragmatic, ultimately learn to mediate conflicts (environmental, social, cultural, economic and political) in order to perpetuate the institutions and social dynamics of our civilization.

SW 225
INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
The world in which students will live and minister will be shaped more and more by information technology. In this course, students will learn how to effectively use computers and computer programs. They will develop computing skills that they can use in their academic studies, in their community lives, and in their ministries. They will learn how to use computers to communicate more effectively, to do research, to find information on the Internet, to organize and analyze data, to manage financial information, and to present information to others. Through this course, therefore, students will develop and demonstrate their competence to use contemporary information technology effectively and to understand general computing principles and solve problems using computer-based applications.

SW 226
CAREERS IN SCIENCE
Undergraduate
This is a course designed to enlighten and broaden your knowledge about the many science careers (i.e. environmental science, biology, chemistry, food science, nutrition, geology, math etc). You will determine the appropriate career path that is best suited to your interests, knowledge, skills and abilities. This course will also offer graduate school and/or professional training preparation.

SW 227
HUMAN GROWTH AND AGING
Undergraduate
As we progress through life and its stages, we realize and experience the fact that the human body is biologically changing, growing and aging. This course provides a study of the basic structure and functions of the human body, its anatomy and physiology. With this foundation, age-related characteristics and some dysfunctions associated with the aging process are studied. Students will apply learned theoretical principles by using their own bodies and through the examination of preserved materials in laboratory experiments to explore and assess anatomy and body functions as they apply to age-related changes.

SW 228
ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE
Undergraduate
Africa has some of the most valuable environmental resources in the world. But it is also experiencing some of the greatest environmental tragedies. Everyone is affected by the degradation of the land, the destruction of forests, the loss of biodiversity and the pollution of air, water and food. The poor and marginalized are the most vulnerable to these problems. Justice and peace are impossible without healthy, sustainable environmental policies and practices. Everyone ministering in the contemporary Church and society must understand and address these environmental challenges. This course will help students learn how to interpret contemporary scientific information about the environmental issues that impact every aspect of life in Africa. They will examine gender and cultural issues that relate to environmental problems. They will also critique potential solutions to environmental problems. Through this course, therefore, students will develop and demonstrate their competence to describe and explain connections among diverse aspects of nature and to understand the scientific and social dimensions of an environmental issue.
SW 229
ISSUES IN HEALTH POLICY AND ADMINISTRATION
Undergraduate
The goal of this course is to provide a general overview of the American health care and health insurance systems. We first will discuss the debates over the enactment and framing of the American constitution, and the political institutions that the nation then developed. We then will analyze the health care system that emerged in this political context, focusing on 1) the rise of the private health insurance system; 2) the incentives provided by government to encourage employers to purchase such insurance on behalf of their employees; and 3) the debate over the role of government in providing coverage for those outside the employer-sponsored health insurance systems. We will examine in some depth the evolution and current context of the Medicaid Program, taking a close look at the politics that led to the 2003 Medicare Modernization Act, as well as the issues raised by the implementation of that law. The following questions will be examined in this course: Is it possible to provide coverage to the uninsured without increasing the national debt? What are the main drivers of rising health care costs and what are the options for cost-containment? What are the options for aiding the uninsured? What are the options for paying for any such initiatives? What are the long-standing obstacles to comprehensive reform proposals? What are the politics of the current, Affordable Care Act, reform initiative? Why is it that the American health delivery system suffers from specialty maldistribution (too many specialists and not enough generalists) and geographic maldistribution (too many providers in some communities and too few in others)? What is managed care? What does the managed care industry look like today? What is the difference between disease management, care management and the current efforts to create “medical homes?” What are provider profiles and how are they used to improve quality? Why is it that the nation does not have an effective long-term care insurance system? What are the alternatives to institutionalization for those in need of long-term care services?

UNDERSTANDING AND APPLYING PROJECT MANAGEMENT
Undergraduate
Project Management is a very important business discipline that can become very complicated. There are numerous Project Management methodologies, and all of them share the same basic steps and tools. The purpose of this course is to demystify Project Management by presenting its basic framework and tools. The course translates Project Management theory into a practical and effective methodology the student will be able to apply on the job. Starting with working definitions of Project and Project Management, the course describes how projects are initiated, evaluated and organized with analytic techniques such as discounted cash flow and PERT/CPM. Project execution and control are covered next, along with the documentation and communications skills that are needed to keep a project on track. The course concludes with an overview of Project Management applied to computer software development.

SW 231
URBAN DIRT
Undergraduate
This is a course designed for the student who desires to know the difference, complexity, and the diversity between soil and dirt. The benefit of learning about soil is multi-fold: understanding the Earth, understanding how and where your food grows, gardening, impact on water quality, and most of all understanding your role in improving overall environmental quality and sustainability. In addition, this class will offer introductory knowledge of soil and its dynamism. Although learning about soil can be very scientific, there are several social and artistic views of soil. If you ever wanted to know why soils are various colors and fertility, and home to various organisms, as well as the uses and mapping of soils, then this is the course to take. Understanding the complexities of soil will aid in understanding Earth and its intricacy.

SW 232
DIMENSIONS OF AGING: CHANGING IDENTITIES
Undergraduate
Living longer provides us many opportunities and challenges. Our parents, our relatives, our friends and we ourselves are all involved in aging. This is a journey that we all take without much planning or preparation. We will explore many facets and perspectives on aging to deepen our understanding and empathy and enable us to develop our own plan. Students will examine the aging process from many perspectives, including social, psychological, economic, physical, and health. We will identify and analyze our attitudes toward aging. Through reading, lectures, guest speakers, interviews and personal planning we will: Analyze and evaluate broad societal and specific cultural attitudes toward aging; evaluate strategies for successful aging and design a personal plan; and, develop interviewing and discussion skills around complex and changing identities related to aging.
SW 233
APPLIED INFORMATION MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to the key concepts in the field of Management Information Systems (MIS) and enhances understanding of the issues that business organizations face when developing and managing information systems. In this course, students will be presented with a broad overview of the field to first examine the increasing impact of information technology in business organizations, and second, in preparation for more advanced courses in data analytics and information systems. Specifically, the three major topics covered include (1) e-businesses and networks, (2) databases, as well as (3) enterprise resource planning (ERP) and process models. These topics are designed to prepare students for further inquiry on web analytics, data mining, project management, supply chain management, as well as business in general. By completing the course, students should be better equipped to apply IT skills to solve business problems, to participate in IT projects, and to communicate more knowledgeably with IT professionals.

SW 234
VIRTUAL PALEONTOLOGY
Undergraduate
Paleontology is the study of fossils which are the remains and traces of past living things. The investigation of fossils is essential to our understanding of how life originated and evolved on earth. Fossils provide us with critical information regarding the character and age of the most significant biological events in earth's history, including: the earliest forms of life, the pivotal development of multi-celled plants and animals, the rise and demise of the dinosaurs, the adaptive diversification of mammals, and the origin of our own species. This course will examine how fossils can be used to decipher ancient patterns of development and change within earth's physical and biological systems, how biodiversity patterns for fossil groups compare to living groups, and how the anatomy of plant, invertebrate, and vertebrate fossil groups evolved in both form and function. Other topics will include: fossil preservation, determining the age of fossils, reconstructing ancient environments and ecosystems, lifestyles of fossils, dinosaurs, mass extinctions and the evolution-creation controversy.

SW 235
YOGA AND WELL-BEING
Undergraduate
The ancient practice of yoga offers a combination of benefits: physical endeavor, relaxation, contemplation and stress reduction. This course will explore the many dimensions of yoga. Class meetings provide time for the practice of yoga movement, focused breathing and meditation, all of which help to reduce stress. Students explore the impact of these practices on body and mind through independent research, reflection and class discussion. As a result of this course, students will learn fundamental yoga movement; identify the impact of yoga on the physical body; explore yoga philosophy; and understand how yoga is one component of well-being.

SW 236
ADVANCED INTERNET
Undergraduate
This course is designed for students who want to move their basic computer skills up to the next level. It addresses more advanced concepts of computer literacy. Students in this course will take their Internet skills to new levels, gaining comfort with surfing the web, and learning how to navigate the flood of information once they find what they're looking for. Students will learn how to enhance the effectiveness of search engines, expand their knowledge about other browser applications and general networking concepts, and apply techniques to safeguard against viruses and SPAM and keep computers free from unwanted visitors. Students will find helpful information on the most talked about newcomers to the online world such as social networking sites like Facebook and MySpace, blogging, and downloading media content from YouTube and iTunes, as well as an introduction to personal email and instructions for safe surfing.

SW 237
INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTERS AND INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course provides an overview of microcomputer applications including Microsoft Windows 8, Microsoft Office 2013, Microsoft Word 2013, Microsoft Excel 2013, Microsoft Access 2013, and Microsoft PowerPoint 2013.

SW 238
BIOLOGY OF AGING
Undergraduate
Students will explore current and historical understanding of the human aging process, with emphasis on normal versus abnormal changes. Each student will select 1) a body system and 2) a related disorder/abnormality to focus on in anchoring their experiences. In addition, students will complete a project for each competence selected on enrollment.
SW 239
THE BOTANICAL WORLD
Undergraduate
All life is dependent on plants. They are our most precious resource. Our relationship with the plant world encompasses things we take for granted: food, clothes, furniture, musical instruments, medicines, homes and the aesthetic qualities of plants that permeate and refresh the human condition. Recent scientific successes in genetics and biotechnology have made us more aware of what has been done to plants. In this highly interactive course, we will explore these new controversial revelations and the connections between plants and our individual lives.
While this is not a laboratory course, we will look at and take apart real plants in and outside the classroom, and even grow some lower plants (molds) at home. There will be one field trip to the Lincoln Park Conservatory and a walk around the Loop (weather permitting).

SW 240
THE SCIENCE OF TRADITIONAL CHINESE MEDICINE
Undergraduate
This is a 10-week, four competence course that explores the science of Oriental Medicine and its system of interconnection to nature and the human body. Students will study Chinese Medicine (CM) theory, investigating this healthcare model that is based on imbalances or blockages in the body leading to illness. They will study CM Five Element theory which connects personal constitution to nature and the elements.
Students will explore the system of "meridians" or nerves whose interconnectedness generate health in CM. Through processes of self-exploration, written essays and reflection, students will review the sciences of CM theory, pathology, diagnosis and basic applications of the medicine (Acupressure/herbology).

SW 241
GOLD, OIL, GEMS AND SOIL: THE SCIENCE OF MINERAL AND ENERGY RESOURCES
Undergraduate
From the oil, coal, and nuclear materials that supply us energy to the metallic minerals and soils that provide building materials, electronics, ejewelry and food, modern civilization is dependent on an assortment of non-renewable resources. This course will introduce you to the geologic processes that generate society's principal mineral and energy resources including oil, natural gas, coal, nuclear materials, gold, industrial metals, gems, and soils. We will investigate how geological circumstances result in the geographic distribution and scarcity of mineral and energy resources, the historic interdependence and competition of societies for these resources, and the geopolitical and economic consequences of resource depletion due to population growth and global industrialization. Topics investigated will include: oil formation and peak oil; coal/natural gas formation and cap and trade policies; nuclear fuels and enviro-statism; gold formation, gold as money, and gold as a cultural artifact; gem formation, crystallography and gem use in jewelry; metallic mineral formation, industrial use, and scarcity trends; soil formation, farming and soil depletion; and the global outlook on mineral and energy resources.

SW 242
FOOD: CULTURE, CUISINE AND SCIENCE
Undergraduate
This course sets students loose in the environment of their own kitchens with a number of structured exercises that demonstrate scientific principals first hand. It includes classroom discussion and examination of these principles. Furthermore, students will discuss how cuisine and cooking styles are unique to and important to world cultures and the people who experience them. In addition to attendance and discussion, learners will keep food journals and write short final papers or give presentations.

SW 243
DESIGNING ONLINE TRAINING
Undergraduate
This course looks at instructional design in much more depth than the Technology, Training and Human Performance Course. In this course, the student will study what Instructional Design is, how it works, and why it is important in the creation of all types of career and educational training. The course will present various models of instructional design, then have the students design actual instructional training modules.

SW 244
STATISTICAL REASONING: UNDERSTANDING AND USING STATISTICS
Undergraduate
This course will teach students the basic concepts of statistics. Students will investigate topics including descriptive statistics, correlation, normal distributions, probability, sampling distributions and hypothesis testing. By the end of this course, students will able to complete a statistical analysis of datasets using Microsoft Excel as the primary tool. Considerable time will also be devoted to discussing how statistics are used and abused.
SW 245
GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES: AFRICA AND TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course is designed to provide learning opportunities that derive their unique attributes from a focus on the African continent. We will review definitions of technology and globalization as they apply to emerging African nations. We will study how the general application and use of various technologies have affected the developing countries of Africa from a social, cultural, economic and practical perspective. Technologies to be reviewed include electrification, radio and television, telecommunications, computers, and the Internet. Students will participate in a live video conference with a group of United Nations delegates assigned to committees that oversee technology matters around the world for the purpose of discussing the dispersion of technology. Students must have regular access to the Internet because of research requirements.

SW 246
PHARMACOLOGY AND HEALTH
Undergraduate
This course will be an overview of the main human biological systems in health while highlighting and emphasizing the chief pharmacological agents used to treat common human diseases and pathologies of those systems. Discussion will include pharmacokinetics, drug action mechanisms, side effects, costs, and the role that prevention might play in attempting to minimize drug utilization. The course will include a historical overview of the use of medicine throughout the ages and consider current drug development. Through the use of a textbook, current literature review, discussion and audio visual adjuncts, the course will help to build a foundation for basic understanding of the relationship between healthy human biological systems, pathology development, and how pharmaceutical agents relate to health and disease.

SW 247
SCIENCE TECHNOLOGY SOCIETY
Undergraduate
The 20th century has experienced the most profound and greatest number of changes of any in our history. From the invention of plastic to the identification of genes, science and its practical application through technology has changed the way we think and perceive our environment. This course will be an overview of some major discoveries that occurred in the past 100 years and how these discoveries have affected society for better or worse. We will look at how the work of women and minority scientists has been included or not included in the mainstream.

SW 248
THE SCIENCE BEHIND ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE
Undergraduate
This course is designed to equip students with the necessary learning experiences to enable them to make informed decisions that affect environmental well-being and environmental sustainability. Learning experiences will include, but are not limited to, classroom instruction, group discussions, and individual research.

SW 249
ANIMAL SCIENCE AND THE ROLE OF MODERN ZOOS
Undergraduate
The main objective of this course is for students to increase their love and understanding of animals!!! It will be a fun and interactive course where you will gain a general understanding of the animal kingdom and how animals are classified. You then will be able to identify animals as an individual organism, describe their natural habitat and better understand their role or ecological niche as it relates to its environment. Students will discover the importance of zoos and how they have become leaders in providing the knowledge needed to preserve the natural world. You?ll learn what zoos do with that information and how they make a difference with regards to environmental issues such as habitat destruction and the importance of species preservation. Students will investigate different zoological institutions and compare how each are unique in their animal collections, the way they support and conduct research, and convey that knowledge to the scientific community and the general public.

SW 250
WIDGETS, CLICKS, & TWEETS: ESSENTIALS OF APPLIED WEB TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course will provide students with an overview of the history of the Internet and basic marketing strategies as they relate to the Internet and Web 2.0 technologies. Students will learn about how to keep abreast of new technology, how these technologies can be used to market services and products as well as how they can be used to create and maintain social networks for professional use.
SW 251
UNDERSTANDING GLOBAL HEALTH CONCEPTS AND PRACTICES
Undergraduate
Many of the greatest challenges in public health are global. This course uses a multidisciplinary approach to discuss the major underlying determinants of poor health and the relationship between health and political, social and economic development. Drawing upon the sciences, social sciences and humanities, learners will be introduced to the evolution of modern approaches to the setting of global health priorities, the functions and roles of health systems, an overview of current global health practices, and the major institutional players in global health. We will explore the factors shaping the global distribution of disease and their connection with issues of social, economic and political development, as reflected in the Millennium Development Goals. We will also consider the impacts of globalization on health risks and availability of health resources. By engaging in critical assessment and proposing innovative solution ideas, we will develop all four competences offered for this course.

SW 252
ENVIRONMENT AND HEALTH
Undergraduate
Using scientific reasoning, the student will determine how and to what extent the quality of health and life can be altered in varied geographic and personal environments. As a foundation, emphasis will be placed on the scientific method, cellular structure and reproduction, and an overview of environmental issues impacting health today. Relationships of the nutrition-digestive and respiratory systems of the human body as environmental portals will be studied. Problem-solving skills will be employed in the manipulation of data. Investigation of norms and their deviations in selected physiological systems will also be studied.

SW 253
USING STATISTICS
Undergraduate
This course is designed to introduce the basic concepts of descriptive statistics, employ their use in everyday life, and make sense of the data. Students will create statistical analyses of data and learn to make decisions from reports that they produce in Excel. Understanding statistical concepts is emphasized instead of memorization of formulas. Students will learn from group projects how to analyze data using Excel spreadsheets. The course involves participation in discussion, presentation of cases and demonstration of analyses.

SW 254
ENVIRONMENTAL SUSTAINABILITY AND ADVOCACY
Undergraduate
BRIDGE PROGRAM COURSE. This course focuses on the interdisciplinary study of humans, the environment, and their interrelationships. It includes natural resources and processes, growth and change, values, and individual responsibility and civic engagement. It will explore the complex relationship of the individual to urban systems and of urban systems to the world environment. Emphasis will be given to the ecology of metropolitan Chicago, engaging and challenging students to propose and advocate for programs and policies that bring about a more sustainable city --- "What could a sustainable metropolitan Chicago look like? What are you willing to do to achieve that ideal?" Writing assignments and field work, as appropriate to the discipline, are part of the course.

SW 255
BRAIN, MIND AND BEHAVIOR
Undergraduate
Scientists have only recently found means to isolate chemicals of the brain, analyze its electrical systems and try to answer questions such as: How does the brain strike a balance between its genetic blueprint and influences from the environment? Where does it “hold” language? This course explains what science knows and does not know about the human brain. It draws on the most current findings, theories, and applications of brain science. Students will meet for guided discussions and will be given textual material for class activities and independent assignments.

SW 256
EVERYDAY ECOLOGY
Undergraduate
Every week, we learn of typhoons and landslides, floods and hurricanes, droughts and other natural catastrophes. Scientists now agree that the major cause of climate shift is man-made, specifically our use and abuse of global energy resources. In Everyday Ecology we will analyze our energy use patterns and explore practical alternatives. The word “ecology” originates from the meshing of two Greek words meaning the “study of homes.” Although the main focus of this course is the individual household, another ?household? we must take into account is the economy. Ecological economics examines how both disciplines need to look toward the other to be viable long term. We will examine options to bring the earth household (ecology) and the human household (economy) together for the benefit of both. This course observes how ? man? is connected to the world around him. It allows us to see our options in response to growing concern over global climate change. Through readings, field trips, activities, discussions and an analysis of our personal use of energy, this course enables us to become increasingly aware of ecological issues. You will learn to evaluate the effect of personal choices on the earth and be introduced to alternative, ? greener? options.
SW 258
THE CITY IN THE YEAR 2030
Undergraduate
What will cities be like 25 years from now? The history of cities throughout the world offers clues to this question. This course will explore the theories of leading experts in the field of urban research and prognostication. Students will examine these views in the context of the political system, population trends, and urban economic activity. Recommended strategies to improve the strength of historically great cities will be analyzed and compared. Practical application of concepts utilized in other areas will be evaluated in terms of their potential use in the City of Chicago.

SW 259
PREHISTORIC LIFE
Undergraduate
This course promotes students’ investigation of fossils to interpret the character of 3.5 billion years of biological evolution and ecological change on earth. By way of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and applicable technologies, emphasis is on the exploration of earliest evidence of life, development of multi-celled plants and animals, dinosaur evolution, mass extinction events, mammal diversification, human origins as well as appraisal of the societal reliance on fossil resources and the persistent debate over evolution versus creation. Learning is assessed through labs, a fieldtrip, an exam, video summaries, contributions to online discussions, and a research paper in a scientific format.

SW 260
DE-CODING HUMAN BEHAVIOR
Undergraduate
This course targets the link between the physical environment and social behavior. Every physical space is also a social space; its organization contains a "code" of responsive behavior for people to understand. We focus on these "codes," and examine the ways they provoke conformity and deviance from individuals and groups. Students are expected to enter the social environment and gather publicly-observable data for analysis in the classroom setting. The ethics of social research, and of an observer's interaction with the environment, are key points of inquiry during the quarter. Students in this course work at a "pre-ethnography" level, and are primed by its conclusion to enter and analyze any social group and its physical surround.

SW 261
EXPLORATIONS IN BIOLOGY
Undergraduate
This course provides an introductory study of organic macromolecules, the cell, genetic activity and the theory of evolution. Throughout the course we will stress the interdependence of the three biological sub-specialties of genetics, ecology and evolution.

SW 262
THE HAPPINESS PROJECT
Undergraduate
What is happiness? How do we know that we are happy? How can we become happier in our lives? In recent years, there have been an increasing number of college courses dedicated to the study of happiness, positive psychology, life satisfaction, etc. This course will be an introduction to how various fields and disciplines are examining topics relevant to the nature of happiness and well-being, while providing an opportunity for students to examine their own ideas and expectations for happiness. Using Gretchen Rubin's popular book, The Happiness Project, as a guide, we will review the latest theories and research in psychology, the sciences, religion, and the arts, as well as ancient wisdom and popular culture, to determine what is known and assumed about happiness. Participants in the course will develop and assess their own happiness project during the last several weeks of the course.

SW 263
THE CITY IN NATURE: WRITING THE URBAN LANDSCAPE
Undergraduate
In the 200-year-old tradition of American Nature Writing, its practitioners--from John Muir to Thoreau to Edward Abbey--have been indifferent if not openly hostile to cities. The nature essay has tended to focus on the writer's experience of landscapes where people are not normally resident: deserts, mountains, the deep forests. This focus suggests that nature is out there, and that to feel a part of it, we must leave where we live and go visit it. In this nonfiction writing course, students use the conventional essay to offer an alternative possibility: that we inhabit nature wherever we live, including cities, and that the intersection of nature and culture in urban environments is an important subject for analysis and exposition. To prepare themselves to write their own nature essays, students will read along the extraordinary canon of American nature writing; become familiar with the natural history of their own local environments; keep an urban nature journal; and familiarize themselves with current readings in environmental philosophy and ecopsychology.
SW 264
ANIMALS AND CONTEMPORARY LIFE
Undergraduate
This is a Service Learning, Externship. Students will pursue literature on the historical connections between animals and humans, and will review philosophies concerning treatment of animals. Students will also be exposed to current issues in animal welfare, including a volunteer experience in an animal shelter. In this course, faculty will provide a framework for assessing the roles and condition of animals, particularly domestic animals, in our culture. Assigned readings range from Peter Singer's noted work on animal experimentation Animal Liberation to excerpts from Black Elk Speaks, a Native American treatise on hierarchy and respect for life in American aboriginal culture. Students will pursue their own interests through further readings and commentary.

SW 266
AN APPROACH TO SYSTEM THINKING
Undergraduate
This course provides an introduction to the form of systems thinking called system dynamics. This course introduces the theory and application of the system dynamics modeling approach as it is used to support strategic decision making in complex social systems. It involves the qualitative and quantitative mapping of the relevant system structure (including physical processes, information links and human decision-making) and the simulation of the dynamic consequences of that structure. The aim is both to examine the general modes of behavior that result so as to gain qualitative insights and also to experiment with alternative policies in order to formulate ones which improve behavior. It has three distinctive themes: the concept of information feedback; the use of computer simulation models to explore complex behavior and the need to work with the mental models of relevant system actors (with a view both to drawing on the relevant knowledge and interpretations of the system and to implementing the insights gained from the modeling process). The course deals with all stages of the modeling approach as well as introducing some research topics in the field. Students will use 'state of the art' simulation software with a graphical interface (such as STELLA/iThink) and will be expected to work with quantitative computer models. The practical application of system dynamics will be emphasized throughout, using various cases studied from business public-policy making and elsewhere.

SW 267
NUTRITION FOR A LIFETIME
Undergraduate
Today's consumers want and need to be educated about taking charge of their own health. With the current fast-paced world that has spilled over into our eating habits, food choices have become unlimited. Choosing a healthful approach to diet requires basic information about our bodies' nutritional needs. The greater our understanding of our basic bodily needs, the better we are able to make choices concerning our health. This course will offer an overview of the basic science of nutrition, with an emphasis on the relationship between disease and nutrition, and current research findings.

SW 268
WOMEN, NATURE, AND ECOLOGY
Undergraduate
Women and nature have been linked since earliest times. As our ideas about both have changed, so have our ideas of their relationship. Changing conceptions of the body, as part of nature, have impacted our understanding of the mind's functioning, approaches to physical and psychological health, and religious thought. Students will study three models of nature to formulate how each looks at the human relationship to nature, defines sex roles, impacts health, and religious standards. We will use readings and discussion.

SW 269
ENERGY AND HEALTH
Undergraduate
This course will provide a framework for understanding human energy systems, such as digestion and respiration, in relation to current healthcare practices to enhance their effectiveness (dietary approach, manipulation therapies, acupuncture, exercise, and meditation). We will consider connections between social and environmental variables such as constitution, stress, lifestyle, and vital physiological functions. Each class will build on the basic understanding of biological systems in relation to energy through lecture and discussion. We will review literature on various healthcare practices to discern sound approaches and practical applications. Students will cultivate an appreciation for daily health choices that cumulatively affect their health.
SW 270
MAKING STATISTICS WORK
Undergraduate
This highly interactive course will help students understand and use statistics to their advantage at work, and in their lives as informed citizens, consumers, and/or parents. Using examples from daily life and work, students will learn to frame and solve common problems. Despite its scary (or boring) reputation, statistics is at heart a set of very powerful tools for thinking and communicating. With the tools learned in this course, students will be better able to cut through reports at work, weigh the claims of political candidates, drill holes in misleading information, and hammer out the real significance of the news. This is a course for all those who have ever wondered: how likely they are to be hit by lightning, whether they are “normal,” what percentage of the population really elects the President, or what the odds are of winning the Lottery.

SW 271
CHEMICALS IN THE ENVIRONMENT
Undergraduate
Confusion and controversy permeate the discussion of the role man-made chemicals play in the environment. This course will provide an understanding of some basic principles of chemistry, so students can evaluate current environmental issues in their communities, and in the press. A major emphasis will be on the total picture: benefits, costs, risks, and hazards associated with common man-made chemicals. We will follow the chemicals from their manufacture through their use and ultimate disposal. Demonstrations, discussions, readings, and reports will stimulate the student to critically evaluate the impact a group of chemicals has on the quality of our lives, and on the ecosystem.

SW 274
IMPACTS OF VARIED ENVIRONMENTS ON HEALTH
Undergraduate
Using scientific reasoning, the student will determine how and to what extent the quality of health and life can be altered in varied geographic and personal environments. The physiological relationships of the nutrition-digestive, and respiratory systems of the human body will be studied in depth as systems susceptible to negative environmental influences. Use of mathematics and problem-solving skills will be employed in the manipulation of data in the investigation of norms and the deviations from these norms in selected physiological systems. Students will be actively involved in the learning process. Class activities will include lecture, laboratory group projects (including examination of preserved materials), videos, readings and manipulations of data.

SW 275
BODY, MIND, SPIRIT: YOGA AND MEDITATION
Undergraduate
Why are 20 million Americans practicing yoga? This course answers that question with an introduction to yoga and meditation techniques and the underlying scientific and philosophical principles of the system of yoga. The first half of each class will be experiential, conducted as a yoga and meditation class for beginners, providing tools to reduce stress, focus the mind, and cultivate inner peace. This first hour and a half will use yoga postures, breathing exercises, and meditation techniques. The second half of each class will use readings, reflection, and discussion to examine the scientific and philosophical knowledge of yoga as a way to ease stress, strengthen the bone and muscle structures, lower blood pressure, increase flexibility and strength, improve mind functioning, and provide spiritual sustenance. We will read Yoga Mind Body and Spirit: A Return to Wholeness by Donna Farhi, and the The Yoga Sutras of Patanjali, research articles on the scientific studies of yoga’s benefits from journals and websites, etc. Students will keep weekly reflection journal observations on the changes(s) they notice in themselves. This course will refresh, relax, rejuvenate. Yoga mats and other props will be provided. Bring/wear comfortable clothes (no jeans, belts, dresses). This is a Gentle Yoga class for beginners. Yoga means to unite or yoke so course will explore the ways to unite body, mind, spirit. This course is designed to 1) help establish good health and well-being; 2) gain scientific knowledge and understanding of the various systems of the human body; and 3) explore the spiritual benefits of meditation.

SW 278
BIOMEDICAL ASPECTS OF STRESS
Undergraduate
As many as 93% of diseases are now believed to be related to stress. This astounding figure underscores the importance of understanding the various aspects of stress, particularly the biological dimensions. The links among perceptions, personality type, brain chemistry, and the endocrine and cardiovascular functions are becoming increasingly well established. More recently, links between our immune system and the activities of the brain are helping us to recognize the truly integrated functions of our bodies in ways which will have very important impacts on our conceptions of health and disease. Students will develop an understanding of stress and stressors, the relationship of stress and the General Adaptation Syndrome as a focal point for applying this information. Exploration of individual differences in stress responses and stress-management techniques will provide a platform for synthesizing information on a personal basis and for analyzing environment/biological interactions.
SW 280
GROWTH AND DECLINE: A DEMOGRAPHIC PUZZLE
Undergraduate
The search for balance between economic goals and environmental concerns is an ongoing struggle faced by communities, states, and countries throughout the world. The successes and failures of population and environmental planning will be reviewed in both an historical and a theoretical context. Students will explore issues involved in establishing vital and healthy places to work and live. Through lecture-discussions, readings, films, and independent research, the relationships among population, public services, corporate growth and development, and environmental regulations will be examined. Students will select an area for study and formulate their own demographic and planning strategies.

SW 281
ALASKA
Undergraduate
From the mid-century push for statehood and the 1960's fight for Native land rights, through the pipeline boom of the 1970's and the economic bust of the 1980's, Alaska's recent history has been tumultuous and presents an ideal context for exploring the challenges of resource development. Many of the controversies which have recently divided Alaska result from the complex relationship between rights of indigenous people and development of the state's rich natural resources.

SW 282
NUTRITION BASICS AND BEYOND
Undergraduate
This introductory course will provide a framework for understanding the fundamentals of nutrition, vitamins and minerals, nutrition and disease prevention, food labeling, nutrition through the life cycle, weight management and more. Each class will build upon the basics by exploring current issues and research related to specific topics. Throughout the course, students will begin to separate information from misinformation as well as gain practical knowledge to incorporate into day to day life.

SW 283
SOCIETIES IN TRANSITION: ERITREA AND ETHIOPIA
Undergraduate
Throughout the world, societies are changing as former political and economic structures are supplanted by emerging democratic systems. SNL has developed travel-study courses under the general title "Societies in Transition" as a way of introducing adult learners to these dramatic changes and as a means of allowing them to experience rich and diverse histories, new cultures, and extraordinary physical environments. Emergent Eritrea: Independence Along the Red Sea is the first in the series to focus on the Horn of Africa, a region of significant geopolitical importance. This course provides students first hand exposure to Eritrea, one of Africa's newest nations, during its critical phase of postwar reconstruction and modernization. Our exploration of the geographic features, ecology and natural resources of Eritrea will elucidate the environmental challenges facing the inhabitants of this sub-Saharan region. Students will have the opportunity to meet with individuals from many sectors of this society, including artisans, teachers, Eritrean students, government officials, freedom fighters, priests, members of the women's federation, and business owners.

SW 285
PRECALCULUS
Undergraduate
The purpose of this course is to continue to develop the student's logical, pattern recognition, organizational, and algebraic skills. The goals are to prepare the student to deal with the increasing mathematical nature of life's problems and to prepare the student for possible future calculus courses. The course will rely heavily on the interactive approach. Examples will be studied to introduce theory and applications. Discussion and questions will be encouraged. Homework will be recommended and discussed, and the student will do problems in class.

SW 286
SEXUAL HEALTH
Undergraduate
We will study the male/female anatomy and physiology, and its dysfunction, including impotency and infertility. We will discuss how these dysfunctions affect normal sexual function, and how sexually transmitted diseases are identified and avoided. Emphasis will be on healthy and safe sexual physiological function. We will explore sexual development throughout the life cycle from adolescence, middle age to maturity and how these biological changes impact our sexual health. The learning experience will include lectures, discussions, and expert speakers from the field.
SW 287
ROCKET TO THE STARS 2000: SPACE FLIGHT IN FILM SOCIETY
Undergraduate
This course explores the impact of space flight in the 20th century. We have witnessed development of space flight, and have extended our reach beyond the surface of our planet. Outer space has provided a host of new discoveries that have revolutionized our understanding of ourselves, the universe, and our significance within it. It has also created serious social, economic, and political repercussions for our society. Culturally, Space has also been a kind of blank screen upon which we project our aspirations, our fears, and our speculations. We will examine how popular film has also fashioned our hopes, our fears, and reflected our thoughts about space flight.

SW 288
DESIGNER LIVING: RELATING WORK AND LIVING TO HEALTH
Undergraduate
Creating a balanced lifestyle is coming to be seen as the core of preventive medicine and holistic approaches to health. In this course, students will create a self-care program comprising diaphragmatic breathing, the relaxation response, pacing, exercise, and a balanced diet. In class, focus will be placed on such issues as reappraising our concept of work and leisure, the impact of belief-systems on human biology, and the influence of our concept of time and of light on the human body.

SW 289
MAKING MULTIMEDIA BUSINESS PRESENTATIONS
Undergraduate
This course will instruct the student in the use of popular multimedia software for the development of professional-quality business presentations. Training will be provided in the areas of video and audio editing, graphics enhancement, slideshow creation, and moviemaking. Students will demonstrate their work through in-class presentations and via the internet. The primary focus of each student's multimedia presentation will be the impact of technology on the current state of the U.S. economy. Each student will select and research a specific issue related to technology and finance, prepare a professional-quality video, and present the results of his/her work in class.

SW 290
CONCEPTS IN MATHEMATICS
Undergraduate
This course will focus on interpreting numerical data and problem-solving using basic mathematical tools. Selected topics from branches of mathematics will be reviewed, including: probability, statistics, charts, graphs, linear equations, and solving word problems through basic algebra. Methods will include lectures, hands-on applications, small group problem-solving, quizzes, and research.

SW 291
HISTORY OF LIFE ON EARTH
Undergraduate
The study of fossils, the remains and traces of past living things, is essential for understanding and reconstructing the history of life on earth. Fossils provide us with critical information regarding the character and age of the most significant biological events in earth's history including the earliest forms of life, the pivotal development of multi-celled plants and animals, the rise, success, and demise of the dinosaurs, the diversification of the mammals, and the origins of our own species. In this course, you will explore how fossils and scientific reasoning are integrated to discern the complex history of life on earth. You will also evaluate the impact the discovery and recognition of earth's fossil record has had on society over the last several hundred years such as the position of humans among other species and the corresponding creation-evolution debate.

SW 292
EXPLORING EARTH’S PHYSICAL FEATURES
Undergraduate
This course advances student exploration of earth's 4.5 billion year geologic record in order to evaluate the planet's evolution and the interrelationships between humans and landforms. Through the application of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and prevailing technologies used by geologists, emphasis is on plate tectonics, geologic time, the rock cycle, weathering, earthquakes, fluvial features, rock structures, volcanoes, mountains, plateaus, plains, glacial features, deserts, caves, and coasts. Students also assess human reliance on landforms, the economics of landforms, and cases of earth pseudoscience. Learning is assessed through labs, fieldtrips, a scientifically-formatted research paper, an exam, and contributions to online discussions.
SW 293
AGING REASON
Undergraduate
Reasoning, like human life, comes in layers that need to be unravelled if we are to make sense of it. As Bernard Shaw put it, "Reason makes a good servant but a bad master." That may come as a surprising thought to those of us brought up to think that everything desirable and true is scientific and science is based on reason. This course will examine the maturing of the reasoning processes employed in science, the mechanisms or methodologies used to validate data, namely the development of scientific reasoning in the Western hemisphere from naive realism through logical positivism to Popperian falsification. This will help us to clarify the status of the data that we use or write about. It will also examine the maturing of the biological processes of the human being, the mechanisms of aging, including modern research experience demonstrating the way in which underlying assumptions can influence both reasoning about and experience of biological aging processes. Class presentation and discussion backed up by library-based reading. In class, we will focus on the key concepts of paradigms in science and religion, in youth and aging and the way in which basic assumptions influence perception, behavior, and experience.

SW 294
GLOBAL ENVIRONMENTAL CHANGE
Undergraduate
Many ongoing changes in the natural environment are so extensive in scale that scientists consider them a threat to sustaining a reasonable quality of life for humans worldwide. Examples of issues of particular and urgent concern are: the rapid changes in the chemistry of the atmosphere that can alter the earth's prevailing climate patterns; the amount of pollutants in the oceans that can breach essential parts of the food chain; the consumption or contamination of natural resources, such as minerals for industrial use, petroleum, groundwater, and agriculturally important soils and; the spatial reduction of terrestrial biomes with corresponding extinctions of organisms. In this course, we will review and analyze the recent earth science research on these and other global change issues in order to assess their relative importance for the human community. We will also examine and evaluate how human activities can have direct and causal relationships to specific adverse global environmental changes. Additional topics that will be addressed include emerging theories of sustainable development, ecological ("Green") economics, and environmental laws. Through readings, discussions, lectures, and original inquiry, students will be introduced to the principal global environmental change issues. Students will select one issue for more detailed analysis and utilize the course learning experience to formulate a plan for personal, governmental, and/or global action to address an environmental problem.

SW 295
SUCCESSFUL INTERVIEWING
Undergraduate
Interviewing "the process of asking and answering questions" is a part of everyday experience. This course introduces and explores the fundamental principles, theories and techniques of interviewing including the interpersonal communication process, common types of interviews, interview structure, questions and responses. Through collaborative and experiential learning activities, students will prepare for and participate in all aspects of the interview process as the interviewer and interviewee.

SW 296
A BIOLOGICAL APPROACH TO VIOLENCE
Undergraduate
There is a significant difference of opinion concerning aggressive or violent human behavior. Is it a social response to an environment of poverty and other psychological phenomena? Or can it be explained in terms of a biochemical syndrome consistent with scientific data and therefore remediable with psychoactive drugs? In this course, students will be introduced to normal brain anatomy and biochemistry and the technologies that have helped us understand cerebral function. We will examine literature in the biological, medical, and psychological sciences in an effort to develop and demonstrate critical reading and analytic skills of both scientific and pseudoscientific material. We will explore the relative contributions of environment and biology to understanding aggressive and violent behavior as well as potential modifiers of the same.

SW 297
WRITING THE EARTH
Undergraduate
In this course, students will learn creative writing while exploring geologic history. Geology is the window into the history of the earth and all the organisms that have lived and died here. Every rock in quarries, road cuts, or pebbles on a beach carries part of the earth's history. There, one can find the drama of evolution and mass extinction, the violent uplift of mountains and their slow erosion into plains, the crashing of seas flooding the continents and the drying of sediments abandoned as the seas recede, the first steps of an ape that would be human and the changes that made all of us from that beginning. Earth history is filled with drama, with actual adventure, and light romance, and grim catastrophe. Factual writing alone cannot communicate the emotions we feel as we experience earth's own poetry. For that, we need the depth and energy of creative expression. In this course, students will learn the basics of reading rocks and explore earth history for themselves. They will also learn to communicate their experience to others through creative writing in fiction, essays, or poetry. Regular class meetings will be held with full day field trips. Class time will be divided between the explorations of geologic concepts and creative writing. Geologic concepts will be introduced through readings, discussion, and hands-on experience with real rocks. Creative writing will be introduced through readings, discussions, and writing exercises. Most of the writing exercises for each class will be based on student's hands-on experience in that class.
SW 298
EXPLORING THE INTERNET
Undergraduate
In this introductory-level course, you will develop a broad knowledge of the Internet technology and understand how it can be useful to personal and work life. The class will be “hands on” and you will learn how to access Internet applications and use them. We will discuss the history of the Internet, getting connected to the Internet, and the various functions used on the Internet. We will also create websites, focusing on their design.

SW 299
MATTERS OF SCIENCE
Undergraduate
One set of laws describes all motion. All matter is made of atoms (actually quarks and leptons!). Stars live and die like everything else. All life is based on the same genetic code. These basic ideas of science and their application to technology are the focus of this course and they offer you what will probably be a new way of thinking about science. If you can get excited about recognizing and discovering what lies behind many everyday encounters with the world around you -- and some not so everyday as well -- just for the enjoyment of learning about them and how they work, this course may be the way to put capstones on your Physical World competencies. This will be a course unlike any other you have experienced -- you will be learning on an independent study basis but also interacting and exchanging ideas with others in a virtual classroom located on the Internet. Through your research in response to questions and pursuit of independent projects, guidance by a primary text, other readings and the instructor, the fruits of your classmates' efforts, and the unexpected that can come from (written) conversation, this course will touch on the roots of most scientific disciplines (eg. physics, chemistry, astronomy, biology, ecology). It will do so in ways that should help you to see their connections to each other and to various technologies. You will also examine your own problem-solving strategies and various aspects of scientific inquiry. An overall outcome of achieving the competencies of this course will be the development of a scientific literacy to build on in the future. You are invited to visit the course home page: www.depaul.edu/~mfiddler/ms/home.

SW 300
SUSTAINABILITY AND PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE
Undergraduate
Environmental sustainability problems are multidimensional and interconnected to both the earth and human relationships. In this course, students will analyze their workplace, organization or a desired professional setting using the principles of environmental sustainability and recognized best practices. On the basis of this analysis, they will make recommendations. Students will learn to use decision tools and data to conduct this analysis and make strategic environmentally sustainable decisions within their professions. Learners will explore how to make complex and current science content relevant, accessible, and personal. They will be able to explain the science behind sustainability and environmental management, as well as how sustainability connects with the human dimensions of organizational relationships. Additionally, this course will provide a hands-on approach to allow learners to acquire the analytic, communication, and work skills required to be problem-solving professionals and contributors to human sustainability within organizations.

SW 315
ENVIRONMENTAL ETHICS AND SUSTAINABILITY
Undergraduate
This experiential class focuses on readings from Leopold's A Sand County Almanac, including his important essay, “Thinking Like a Mountain” as well as readings from John Muir, who grew up in nearby Portage, Wisconsin. Students will visit the Leopold Center, the world's greenest building, as well as the famous 'shack' where Leopold lived and wrote. They will also tour the Crane Foundation, which works with endangered waterbirds around the world. A visit to one of America's largest farmers' markets, followed by a sustainable lunch at a Wisconsin restaurant, will provide ideas on how Leopold's philosophy can be brought into daily life. During the class, students will reside at Holy Wisdom, a retreat center with a restored prairie in Madison. The area to be visited is unique in the Midwest. Most of the prairieland in the region was formed when vast glaciers crushed the land flat during various Ice Ages in the past. But a small area of southwestern Wisconsin, northwestern Illinois, and eastern Minnesota were never glaciated. There, the hill-and-stream erosion of more than 400,000 years has led to a quite different environment than the surrounding area. Called the "Driftless Area" (because there was no glacial "drift" or dust), the region is famously scenic and was home to the great American architect Frank Lloyd Wright, whose designs reflect the landscape of the region. As the course will be held in autumn, we may anticipate beautiful colors in the deciduous forests.
SW 316
RISE OF THE MAMMALS
Undergraduate

The modern world is dominated by mammals. Mammals have evolved, adapted and currently thrive in tremendously diverse habitats, including the oceans, lakes, rivers, tropical and temperate forests, mountain regions, caves, deserts, grasslands, the arctic tundra and polar regions. How did mammals become so diverse on the planet? Why did they remain small and relatively insignificant for the first two-thirds of their extraordinary 200 million year history? Where and when did modern mammal groups originate? What does the fossil record indicate about the character and timing of human physical and behavioral evolution? In this course, we will explore the extensive fossil record of mammals in order to gain insights to these and other questions concerning the history of this critically important animal group. Through discussions, readings, lectures, labs, examination of fossil specimens, original inquiry, analysis of museum exhibits, and application of scientific reasoning, students will be introduced to the fossil record of mammals and its critical role in establishing patterns of mammalian evolution and historical biogeography. Topics will include: fossil preservation; determining the age of fossil mammals; the transition from reptiles to mammals; Mesozoic mammals; the rise of mammals and extinction of large dinosaurs; evaluating the ecology of ancient mammals; and, the origins and diversification of modern mammal groups. Particular emphasis will be placed on examining the fossil record of primates leading to Homo sapiens and relating ancient mammal biodiversity patterns to current mammal extinction concerns.

SW 317
BODY SCAN: PRACTICAL ANATOMY AND YOUR ENVIRONMENT
Undergraduate

We are confronted daily with a barrage of physical challenges to our body - particularly, our musculoskeletal system. This we experience as pain and altered or loss of function: headaches, backaches, muscle spasms, pinched nerves, etc. When assessing the physical ramifications of stress and strain, an understanding of basic anatomy in the context of our environmental issues (i.e., work, exercise) and the process of aging, is key to making positive choices and changes. In this course, students will utilize a text/workbook, clinical case histories, presentation of a research topic, and class discussions.

SW 318
THE UNIVERSE, SCIENCE, AND THE QUEST FOR UNDERSTANDING
Undergraduate

Astronomy, one of the oldest sciences, links our wonder at the beauty of the night sky, and our quest for meaning, and practical necessities such as navigation and communications. Students will discover in a playful, conceptual, and generally non-mathematical way how science, with intuition, inspiration, and logic helps us to understand our our basic questions: how are the stars made, how is the stuff that we are made of produced, where is the universe headed, and what lies at the end of time? Learning in class will be achieved by a combination of readings, discussion, observational exercises, with one field trip to a major scientific site.

SW 319
ENCOUNTERING UNCERTAINTY AND CHANGE
Undergraduate

Ambiguity, confusion, doubt -- these seem to be synonyms for uncertainty. But the word has had a special meaning since quantum physicist Werner Heisenberg articulated the Uncertainty Principle more than 50 years ago. What effect does an observer have on an event? Can we accurately judge two things at once? How does the decision of what to analyze affect the outcome of the analysis? These are some of the questions which the Uncertainty Principle poses. This class explores the revolutionary change from mechanistic science to relativity and quantum theory. The challenge of Uncertainty in the arts and social sciences will also be considered. Finally, the role which Uncertainty plays in our lives will be explored. This course will involve selected readings, including nonmathematical explanations of Heisenberg's work as well as application of his theory to other disciplines. Videos and films will provide other texts for examination. Classroom work will include thought experiments, small-group interaction, and nongraded writing; tour of Fermilab particle accelerator will be required.

SW 320
CHAOS AND COMPLEXITY
Undergraduate

Chaos: the word is often used to indicate a state of utter disorder. Yet dynamical systems theory -- the science of chaos -- suggests that the connection between chaos and order is not a simple opposition. Chaos may, in fact, be the seed-bed for emergent order. This course examines theories of chaos and the connected theories of complexity, both in terms of scientific applications and as metaphors for the creative process. Students will develop a solid grounding in the development and current state of chaos/complexity theory. Several media, together with simple experimentation, will be used to study fractal geometry, entropy and negentropy, and thermodynamics. After this grounding, students will have the opportunity to analyze their own creative process in terms of the principles of chaos and complexity.
SW 321
BIOLOGY AS DESTINY: GENETICS AND THE RE-MAKING OF HUMANKIND
Undergraduate

From scholarly conferences which debate the site of the "gene for criminality" to mass-appeal treatises on IQ such as The Bell Curve, contemporary biological research is "turning up the heat" on the long-simmering "nature vs. nurture" controversy. The question of whether we are determined by our biology or are products of our culture is once again on the center stage of public concern. Moreover, it seems the very definition of ourselves as unique organisms is under assault. From transplanting the organs of other species into humans, test-tube babies, and surrogate mothers - to genetic testing, DNA fingerprinting, and sex selecting - from cloning to engineering super-humans: these are but a small sample of the disturbing potential suggested by biology's current "tinkering with life." This course explores the intermingling of biological theories and methods, political ideologies, and social dynamics found in research such as the project to map the human genome. Primarily through lecture, we will first establish a basic knowledge of current genetics. On that basis, through discussion and class exercises, we will explore the history and present status of the shifting definition of "human nature." We will be interested particularly in how the scientific and social processes involved are influenced by class, race, culture, and gender considerations.

SW 322
EVOLUTION: A HISTORY OF CONTROVERSY
Undergraduate

The biological universe is wondrously complex and diverse. Evolutionary biologists study the processes that brought about that diversity and complexity. Evolutionary theory attempts to answer many questions. What are the different kinds of organisms? Why are there these kinds of organisms and not others? By what mechanisms do new kinds appear or old kinds change? What is a biologic species? Why do some organisms have sex while others do not? The history of evolutionary thought is a history of controversies in evolutionary thought. We will examine the evidence and arguments on all sides of a question and we will discover how that evidence and those arguments changed through time. Through lecture, readings, and hands-on activities, students will be introduced to form and content of major evolutionary debates. Through class discussion and short position papers, students will argue their opinions on these debates from the point of view of their selected competencies. Students will be expected to complete an exploratory visit to the Field Museum as a homework assignment. The Internet is a lively resource for any course on evolution. In this class, students will gain some Internet literacy as they search for sources and view newsgroup debates. They may even correspond with some of today's evolutionary thinkers. We will also have a pass-word-protected newsgroup for private class discussion.

SW 323
EARTH SCIENCE AND THE HUMAN FUTURE
Undergraduate

This course is rooted in the scientific investigation of the earth, its elements and history, with an eye toward patterns leading to probable future changes. The learning experience includes current literature in relevant disciplines, journal writing and an outdoor lab component.

SW 324
THE BUSINESS OF ENERGY
Undergraduate

In this class we will be discussing some of the history of electrical power generation and regulations that formed the way the business developed in the United States. We will review environmental regulations and their effect on the electrical power generation business today. We will evaluate the deregulation of the electrical generation business and discuss the facts, the pro and cons and current events occurring throughout the United States. Finally, the students will be challenged to propose solutions to avoid energy shortages in the future.

SW 325
THROUGH THE EYES OF THE SCIENTISTS: THE EVOLVING UNIVERSE
Undergraduate

Science appears daunting, but few subjects are as exciting and dramatic as the ageless story of the human mind challenging itself to figure out something altogether new about our evolving universe. Through rich and varied original writings of the greatest scientific thinkers, we will explore some of the most remarkable milestones and breakthroughs in scientific thought from physics to paleontology. Famous scientific personalities will come to life in their vivid explanations of astonishing insights and experiences of discovery in their memoirs and biographies. We will glean understanding into the adventure of the creative process by looking through the eyes of the scientist and ponder the paradoxes, mystery and beauty of human life and what it means to be human. We will emphasize both the contrasts and continuity of scientific thought between the ancient and modern eras, and proceed from the premise that science is inspired by simple wonder and curiosity about the universe of life. By asking "why?", we will live science in its purest form, for each answer only sparks new questions and allows us to take the words of Einstein to heart: "The important thing is not to stop questioning. Curiosity has its own reason for existing. Never lose a holy curiosity."
Energy: what is it? Many of us take it for granted without understanding it. We typically use up to three different forms of energy dozens of times a day. Where does it come from? How do we use it? Because it is so interwoven into our daily lives, we need to be aware of how we use energy and the consequences. This course will explore these ideas while laying the foundation for basic understanding of energy in our daily lives. Topics covered will include what energy is, the different ways we consume it, the technologies behind the different ways we use energy, including different fuels, energy conversion, electricity, nuclear power, energy from water, wind power, and solar energy. Finally, we will take a look to the future and discuss resources, costs and prices, and alternatives. Demonstrations and mini lab sessions will be included to offer students direct experience with forms of energy.

In this web page design course, students will design a web site for a Catholic elementary school as a service learning project in a collaboration between SNL and the Office of Catholic Education, Chicago. Depending on the size of the school, two students may volunteer to collaborate on one school or work alone. Students will meet for seven to eight classes and allocate time to meet with their school representative the other two to three classes. These meetings do not have to be traditional class time but can be scheduled at the convenience of the student and school representative. Students will receive material from their school representative that includes text and images and will collaborate with the school representative in designing the web site. Class time will include editing images, scanning, inserting sound clips and evaluating school web pages. Students must know inserting formatted text, links, tables and targets. Because of the skill level required for this project, students must apply for and be approved by the instructor before course registration. Applicants must have successfully passed the Internet Technology and Its Applications course or have significant experience in fundamentals of web page design.

In 1967 the United States Surgeon General announced that it was "time to close the book on infectious disease". Antibiotics had been introduced in the 1940's, there was an ever-lengthening list of diseases for which immunization was available, and many world health officials imagined a future free of infectious diseases. Yet, as we begin the twenty-first century, infectious diseases are still the leading cause of death in the world. Why? How do we begin to understand the emergence of AIDS, Ebola virus, Lyme disease or Hantavirus? How can we explain the worldwide reemergence of tuberculosis, a disease that had come close to being relegated to history books? In this online course we will seek answers as we study the nature of microbes and the complex, often interrelated factors that contribute to their ability to challenge us even as we pit our science and technologies against them. We will examine such factors as population growth, urbanization, ecological disruption, human migration and antibiotic misuse. In 1996 the Director-General of the World Health Organization announced, "We stand on the brink of a global crisis in infectious diseases." Clearly the book on infectious disease is still wide open, and we will read some of its pages.

Using MS Office tools suite (in particular Access), this course takes students through the entire process for building a database system that will be used to capture, store and present information. In addition to database concepts like designs, reports and SQL queries, the students will discuss and analyze relationships between technology and society.

This course will expose students to nature's dynamic synergy through a variety of integrative learning techniques using modern technology, videos, group projects and provocative readings. Students will develop a strong understanding of Gaia theory and its place in contemporary natural science. This theory, proposed by the English chemist, James E. Lovelock, conceptualizes the earth as a large nesting, interactive system of life, soil, atmosphere and ocean. Earth is assumed to be a breathing biosphere, a symbiotic world. This course presents radical and cutting-edge views of life on earth for learners' discussion, reflection and critique.
SW 331
BIRDS IN THE ENVIRONMENT: ORNITHOLOGY
Undergraduate
Does habitat and biodiversity loss pertain to cities like Chicago? Can species and habitats still exist in urban areas, which are so different from jungle and ocean? The answer to both questions is "yes" when we look at seasonal bird migration. Birds have migrated to and from nesting and breeding sites for thousands of years. They can travel from pole to pole, not only passing through our backyards, but even staying and nesting there. The goal of our class is to experience birds and habitat that are unique to this area and to study their relationship to humans. This relationship puts birds in peril by forcing them into concentrated, small patches of habitat, yet shows signs of hope in the form of protecting habitats such as our forest preserves and restoring habitats such as the Midewin prairie. Participants should expect to work in the field.

SW 332
VIRTUAL BIODIVERSITY: EXAMINING LIFE ON EARTH
Undergraduate
The exploration and measurement of the amount of genetic, species, and ecological variation on earth is emerging as one of science's and society's most important and urgent endeavors. Scientific efforts to study earth's biodiversity have intensified because of our growing appreciation of the role human population growth and urbanization play in accelerating the extinction of plant and animal species through the destruction of critical habitats. Since life on earth has been diversifying for at least 3.8 billion years, but most of the biodiversity that once existed (as much as 99%) has been lost to extinction processes, we will focus on exploring what are "normal" levels of extinction on earth. Central questions addressed in this course are: How is the security of humanity dependent on biological diversity? Is a mass extinction event currently in progress on earth? Do we have an obligation to future generations to keep life on the planet as diverse as possible? Students will be introduced to major biodiversity issues through discussions, readings, lectures, labs, and original inquiry. Students are required to participate in a self-directed fieldtrip to a biological reserve and to develop a detailed research paper on a biodiversity issue of their choice structured in a scientific format. This course will employ a great variety of online biodiversity resources available at institutional websites. Subjects of the course will include: different views of the biosphere; biodiversity trends in earth's fossil record; the value of and human dependence on biodiversity; biodiversity at risk; policies, economics, and technology to protect biodiversity.

SW 333
THE HUMAN GENOME PROJECT
Undergraduate
This course presents a basic understanding of genetic principles necessary to discuss the impact on society of the Human Genome Project. Classical genetics, from its inception as a discipline, held that every organism's genetic makeup was conditioned primarily by environmental factors. Darwin summarized this by claiming that environmental pressures produced organisms whose genetic makeup ensured survival in a particular environment (the survival of the fittest). Contemporary genetics, however, is entering a new era in which both the environment and genetic technologies share in the mission of modifying an organism's genetic makeup. The project of sequencing the human genome has enabled scientists for the first time to identify health-related genes and, based on this, to design new treatments for age-old diseases. At the same time, the Human Genome Project, and genetic research based on it, is raising ethical concerns for the way genetic knowledge will impact health care into the 21st century. Genomics, as the new discipline is being called, explores this complex but fascinating world of cutting-edge genetic research. It is this very world that we will explore in our class setting through a variety of methods including laboratory investigations, class discussions, and student presentations. You may register for up to three competencies.

SW 334
EVERYDAY CHEMISTRY
Undergraduate
Each day we are immersed in chemicals and are participants in and observers of many chemical reactions. This course is designed to teach chemistry and physical science through the observation and explanation of many events we observe in daily life. It has been specially planned for students who have little or no background in science. We will examine the chemistry of substances from table salt and food additives, to fuels for our cars and homes, to semiconductors, new plastics, and revolutionary materials that will improve our lives in the 21st century. This class will emphasize the interconnections in our world through science. We will address safety and the "positive" and "negative" impact of chemicals on our world. There is a chemistry kit required for this course, so that you can perform the experiments safely at home.

SW 335
USING THE INTERNET TO ENHANCE YOUR CAREER
Undergraduate
The Internet has radically expanded the options available to people looking for employment and the alternatives available to employers looking for people. These new options are available for the most part only to people who know how to use the PC, who understand the internet, and who can capitalize on the bewildering array of resources in this new medium. This course will focus on how to make effective use of electronic media to manage and enhance your career. Students will participate in both individual and group exercises designed to sharpen their web-based research, networking, personal marketing, and communication skills.
SW 336
CONTEMPORARY COMPUTING
Undergraduate
The twentieth century not only brought us the dawn of the Information Age, but continued to bring us rapid changes in information technology. All computer systems and applications will change over time. As business requirement change and new techniques are implemented, computers and applications will need changes to keep pace. As we begin the 21st century, computer literacy will undoubtedly become prerequisite in whatever career a student chooses. In this course, we will enhance your knowledge of Microsoft Office software applications. The class consists of some lecture and mostly computer Lab activities. We will expand your knowledge and skills required for communicating and moving information electronically by introducing you to application shortcuts and seldom used features. We will also gain an appreciation for the effect of information technology on people. The framework of this course is based on the use of Microsoft Office.

SW 337
THE HUMAN GENOME AND ITS IMPACT
Undergraduate
This course will address the principles of genetics with an emphasis on the genetic code of the human genome. In this course we will examine: how the genetic code is stored, how it is used, how it is evolving, how it is passed from one generation to the next, the consequences of genetic code errors, the medical, technological, legal and ethical issues associated with the human genome. We will discuss how we can, and how we should, use the information on the human genome.

SW 338
ANCIENT WISDOM VERSUS MODERN SCIENCE
Undergraduate
In ancient times, science and philosophy were one and the same. Our contemporary views of nature and the scientific method are relatively late additions to the world's bank of knowledge. In this class, students will explore how thinkers in older societies make sense of nature. Systems to be examined include mythological approaches to explaining the natural world, and ancient laws derived from Anthropology, Archeology, Astronomy and the theories of Quantum Physics. Students may take this course for only one competence.

SW 339
USING TECHNOLOGY AT THE WORKPLACE
Undergraduate
This course concerns the effective use of microcomputer technology for working professionals, business analysts, project administrators, and support specialists. The course utilizes a project-oriented approach to achieving computer software proficiency in a PC environment, using word processing, spreadsheets, databases, e-mail, and Internet applications. Students will analyze real-world situations, identify underlying issues and possible solutions, and apply best use of technology and available resources to accomplish tasks and goals. Students should have a basic familiarity with the use of microcomputers in a Windows environment.

SW 341
ECOLOGY OF PERSONAL LIFE
Undergraduate
Today, global climate change is threatening human society. Sometimes incorrectly called “global warming,” these shifts in the earth's weather systems have been tied to the burning of fossil fuels in industrialized countries like the United States. But we have to drive to work, don't we? We need to heat our homes, don't we? Besides, what difference does one person make? This course considers the way that human life is connected to the world around us. It also provides an opportunity to see how you might make changes in response to growing concern over global climate change. The course does not propound one solution over another. Rather, it encourages you to become aware of ecological issues and to determine your own answers to the questions they raise. In this class, you will learn to assess the effect of personal choices on the earth and be introduced to other possible choices.

SW 342
INTERNET SECURITY AT HOME AND AT WORK
Undergraduate
The objective of this course is to provide a basic understanding of Information Technology security. It will address technology approaches in detail for both home and work protection. This course will provide an overview of the objectives of security and a framework for understanding fundamentals which should be in place for an Information Technology setting to achieve an adequate security level.
What is human biology? What are cellular functions? Homeostasis? How, precisely, does the human being work? In this course, students will examine how biological systems work together to create a functional human. Each week, students look at a different human biological system, will examine the basic cellular makeup/anatomy of that system as well as the general functioning of that system, and then will apply that information to overall health issues.

In this course, students will be introduced to the world of the Internet. Students will develop some knowledge of internet technology and how it can be useful in personal and work life. Items to be discussed include Internet history, getting connected, and such functions as email, browsing and search engines.

As the workplace becomes increasingly sophisticated, more and more companies expect employees to create attractive PowerPoint presentations, use Publisher to create flyers, brochures and newsletters, and create attractive Word documents. In this course, students will learn design skills in creating work and classroom presentations using PowerPoint, Word and Publisher. Students are encouraged to use course materials from other classes and/or from the workplace and format these materials in PowerPoint, Word and Publisher. Students can then present these projects in other classes and at the workplace but are not required to do so. This course utilizes a project-oriented approach to achieving skills in presentation software. Students will analyze real-world situations, identify appropriate software solutions and apply the best software to accomplish tasks and goals.

What comes to mind when you think about science and technology? Do they seem mysterious, incomprehensible and yet powerful? Could science and the machines it creates both benefit some and harm others? In the best sense, science is about asking questions and continually questioning itself. It is considered a systematic, precise, objective way to study the natural world. Yet if science attempts to be neutral and unbiased in its approach, its results historically leave us with a bitter irony. One example is nuclear energy. It gives us terrible power to destroy and creates extremely harmful radioactive waste, yet through modern medicine using nuclear equipment it has also saved many lives and eliminated suffering. Our daily lives are governed by scientific and technological systems run by experts. Foresters know how to plant trees, but not how to establish conditions under which villagers in developing countries can manage natural forests for themselves. Engineers know how to develop technologies that benefit industries, but not how to dissuade factories from polluting. How much do we really know about the definition of science and its influence on our culture? Did pre-farming cultures use science as a way of understanding their role in the world or is science a phenomenon of modern cultures? In this course, students will examine through critical thinking the nature and history of science and its effects on the future. Students will also address issues in conflicting global views of the use and abuse of technology and developing methods of sharing, controlling, and monitoring our scientific output.

For thousands of years humans, from the time they were able to make the first tools to the production of nuclear technologies, have changed and in many cases radically altered their environment. Their perceptions (values and culture) with respect to the human relationship (and or responsibility) to the environmental spaces in which they lived and or the global commons (like space and the oceans) for the benefit of their current or future society has been critical in influencing the way in which the integrity of the environment and global commons has been impacted. This course will provide a survey of various environmental ethics that have emerged during human history among Western and non-Western cultures, and how these divergent environmental ethics have shaped and influenced not only planetary but space ecosystems. This course is an excellent elective for business, education, religion, sociology/anthropology and science/engineering focus area who seek to understand the foundations and ramifications of human ethics, values and culture on decisions and policies which impact the global environment (or ecosystems).
SW 348
NATURE WRITING
Undergraduate
Observation is the beginning of science. It is also the beginning of the process of writing. This class is designed to encourage you to observe the natural world and to write clearly about it. Thus you will be simultaneously strengthening your observational skills and your expressive skills. You will observe a single natural setting over the course of a quarter, writing short prose pieces that follow specific guidelines. Some of these pieces will be posted on the class website for those outside the class to read, thus providing you with an experience of online publication. Basic skills in grammar and punctuation are assumed; although it is not a prerequisite, you will find it helpful to have completed College Writing before you start this class.

SW 349
RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN PLANT AND HUMAN LIFE
Undergraduate
The purpose of this course is to increase student's awareness and understanding of plant structure, function and diversity, and to help students discover past, current and potential future uses of plants. This course uses Ethnobotany to help students understand how the scientific process leads to new understandings about how our world works and how it can aid us in understanding ways we use science in our lives. Specific learning objectives of the course are to understand and appreciate: (1) plant structure and function and the relationship between the two, (2) plant adaptations and how these adaptations affect the distribution and abundance of plants in nature, (3) the diversity of plants and the ways in which botanists group plants, (4) the way that science contributes to our understandings of how the world works and informs our decisions of how we want our society to be.

SW 350
CAPSTONE SEMINAR: PHYSICAL WORLD
Undergraduate
Capstone Seminar is designed to permit students to explore a topic as a group integrating various methods of inquiry. Pre-99 students will address one set of capstone competencies of their choice. Specific assessment and evaluation criteria as well as learning activities will be articulated by the instructor for a particular section of the course. Successful completion of Research Seminar is required to register.

SW 352
TECHNOLOGY, TRAINING, AND HUMAN PERFORMANCE
Undergraduate
What Robinson and Robinson describe as "the shift from providing training to improving performance" has been cited as a top priority in our fast-paced, global economy. This course covers the principles of training and human performance through an analysis of real case studies in a number of work environments. The course will also present the necessary technology and instructional design tools so that students can design their own training program and develop a basic training and performance plan that reflects their own work environments. Students are expected to have basic computer skills, including the ability to use and save work with Microsoft Word.

SW 353
THE CREATIVE BRAIN
Undergraduate
While brain structure and function can seem daunting, exploring this organ from the perspective of creative output gives learners a non-threatening frame of reference to which all can relate. Learners will look into traditional and contemporary theories of both creativity and brain versus mind, as well as how creativity is perceived in society.

SW 354
INTEGRATING MS OFFICE APPLICATIONS FOR REPORT WRITING
Undergraduate
Students will use an array of Microsoft applications and the Internet to set up a marketing conference spanning several days. They will create documents and solve problems using multiple applications to complete these tasks more efficiently.

SW 355
COMPUTERS AND SOCIETY
Undergraduate
This course explores how computing technologies such as computer software, hardware, and networking have affected our society. We will examine the basics of how these technologies work and how they have affected areas of human endeavors, as well as how they have changed, improved, simplified and complicated society.
SW 356
DATABASE DESIGN AND IMPLEMENTATION FOR SMALL BUSINESS APPLICATIONS
Undergraduate
This course will teach non-computer literate persons to be able to translate a business problem into a conceptual database design, and further to convert the design into a database application using Microsoft Access. By the end of the course, the student should be able to apply knowledge to the following: (1) describing basic database concepts and using common database terminologies; (2) designing databases using appropriate designing notations; (3) translating a schema into a database application in Access; (4) conducting simple user-interface design; and (5) designing small business-based applications.

SW 357
URBAN GEOGRAPHY: THE STUDY OF CITIES
Undergraduate
Course topics include the following: early settlement patterns, their political and social development; transportation mechanisms and their impact on concentrated centers of population; consumerism and trade; locational factors for settlements; neighborhood development, from ghettos to gentrification; urban planning issues; ethnic diversity, poverty and social planning; the built environment of structures; modes of communication with respect to technology, its impact on the global population; comparisons/contrasts of contemporary development between global world cities and American cities.

SW 358
INTRODUCTION TO SPREADSHEETS
Undergraduate
This is an introductory course with Microsoft Excel. Topics include spreadsheet basics, formatting and printing, formulas and functions, charting, and data management. No prior knowledge of spreadsheet software is required; however, students are expected to have a working knowledge of Windows. Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to do the following: create and test spreadsheets using Microsoft Excel; explain and use functions, create pie, bar, column, and line graphs; explain and use linking and embedding; use clip art to add visual interest to a spreadsheet; and explain and use data management capabilities such as data forms, query, filter, subtotals, sort, and pivot tables.

SW 359
EVERYDAY BIOMEDICAL ETHICS
Undergraduate
'Right, wrong; sometimes right, rarely wrong; wrong for children, right for women': Biomedical issues are in the news almost every day, and often it's hard to understand what to think, even less how to think, about their ethical implications. Some ethical issues have a long history and substantial background, while others are so new that even ethical experts struggle. How can a non-expert intelligently read and understand what's published?

SW 360
SOCIETY AND INFORMATION TECHNOLOGIES
Undergraduate
Humans have a long line of technological advances that includes tools, weapons, transportation, mechanical, industrial, and medical advances. On one hand, the computer is just another invention that is part of this long line of technological advances. On the other hand, the ability to program the computer makes it different with an incredible diversity of uses. Computer technology has made large impacts in diverse areas such as sports management, health care, employment, manufacturing, education, defense, and automobiles and many other areas. This course explores how computing technologies such as computer software and hardware, and networking has affected our society. Students will examine the basics of how these technologies work and how they have affected areas of human endeavors. We will examine how these technologies changed, improved, simplified and complicated society.

SW 361
INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER PRODUCTIVITY
Undergraduate
Microsoft Office is the most ubiquitous application suite in personal computing. There is little Office cannot do, from document creation and editing, e-mail and scheduling, spreadsheet and database management, desktop publishing, image editing and even Web design. In this course, we will explore several component applications of Office, focusing on word processor Word, spreadsheet Excel and presentation software PowerPoint, with the goal of developing facility with each application individually and using an integrated approach.
SW 362
INSTRUCTIONAL DESIGN FOR TRAINING
Undergraduate
This course will look at instructional design in much more depth than the Technology, Training and Human Performance Course. In this course, the student will study what Instructional Design is, how it works, and why it is important in the design of all types of career and educational training. The course will present various models of instructional design, then have the students design actual instructional training modules.

SW 363
THE SCIENCE OF YOGA
Undergraduate
Yoga is an ancient system of spiritual development and transformation. In the process of spiritual development, the practitioner of Yoga acquires a wide array of physical and psychological benefits that improve health and well being. Yoga and meditation (meditation is a branch of Yoga) have been demonstrated to be effective in relieving stress, treating anxiety and depression, preventing and healing injuries and improving the functioning of children with special needs. The Science of Yoga will explore the positive physical and psychological benefits of Yoga from a scientific perspective. We will examine scientific studies that have been done on the effects of Yoga and meditation to gain an understanding of why this system of spirituality has become an increasingly integral part of modern health and fitness practice. The ancient origins and philosophical foundations of Yoga will be evaluated in the context of modern understanding of physiological and psychological processes. Students in this class will practice Yoga and meditation techniques and keep a journal of the effects that they experience. They will compare their experiences with the data from scientific studies. Students will also share and compare their experiences from practicing Yoga and meditation with their classmates.

SW 364
WOMEN OF SCIENCE
Undergraduate
Students will explore the contributions of women scientists through recorded history, the essence and importance of their work, the social world in which they worked and their contemporaries, and the challenges they faced at various times in history. Each student will select a scientist about whom he or she will develop a final project, to include: biographical data, a synopsis of the scientist's socioeconomic and political world, description of her work and how it affected contemporary understanding of the world. Also, students will work in teams to find and present initiatives undertaken since 1945 to encourage involvement of women in science, math and technology fields.

SW 365
ADDICTION STUDIES
Undergraduate
This is an introductory course in the field of addiction studies. In this course we will examine the relationship between drugs and behavior, the personal and social concerns of drug-taking behavior and how drugs work in the body and mind. Legal and legally restricted drugs as well as medical drugs will be discussed. We will also cover issues of prevention, treatment and education. By the end of this course students will understand (1) the differences between use, abuse and addiction to drugs; (2) the extent of substance abuse in the United States today; (3) the legal, social and cultural ramifications of substance abuse; (4) methods of treatment and prevention of substance abuse; (5) major classifications of addictive substances; and (6) how drugs work in mind and body. This course will be a mix of lecture, discussion, videos and other supplemental materials. In addition to their competence papers, students will work in small groups on projects related to addiction and will present their group's findings to the class.

SW 366
EXPRESSIVE ARTS THERAPY
Undergraduate
This course offers a multi-arts approach in which different art modalities are woven into the therapeutic process as appropriate to a client's situation. It is grounded not in any particular techniques or media but in the capacity of the arts to respond to human suffering. Various arts--poetry, movement, drawing, painting, journaling, improvisation, music, and sculpture--are used in a supportive setting to facilitate growth and healing. Expressive arts processes have been used successfully in almost all psychotherapeutic contexts, ranging from work with the severely ill to the facilitation of human growth and potential. There is a growing use of the arts in health education, hospice work, and in community art projects especially after catastrophic events. The class will be conducted in a workshop format in which theoretical content will be combined with experiential learning. Lecture, discussion, audio-visual presentation, experiential exercise, guest speakers, and field trips comprise the structure of the class.
SW 367
LEISURE, RECREATION, AND HEALTH
Undergraduate
This course will stimulate your thinking about the meaning of leisure in your life. Leisure today and historically has been central to the human experience. It is an elemental experience, essential to the total well-being of every person; it is a reflection and expression of the cultural values of a society; it is an important vehicle for treatment. Leisure and recreation services are also essential for healthy communities in terms of social climate, environmental quality, and economic stability. Leisure services comprise one of the largest and fastest growing industries in the world, whether measured in dollars spent, persons served, hours of time devoted, or resources used. The study of leisure and recreation is a broad discipline, combining diverse fields of study and professional practice. This course will (1) illustrate the importance of leisure to you and your loved ones, (2) contribute to your ability to become an informed consumer of leisure, (3) question the binary relationship of work and leisure and, (4) teach you how to use leisure to increase emotional and physical health, resulting in a higher quality of life. The course will be interactive and participatory.

SW 368
ADVANCED POWERPOINT AND WORD
Undergraduate
In this advanced course, students will master higher level skills in PowerPoint and Word and study beginning principles of design. Course skills include organizing content, formatting content, collaborating on documents, and formatting and moving documents. This course will begin with studying the Microsoft Certificate Exams for PowerPoint and Word.

SW 369
CHRONIC ILLNESS: WHEN SOMETHING IS ALWAYS WRONG
Undergraduate
Everyone has either a disorder or a relative with a disorder, but often we focus only on the clinical information that physicians give us, especially since they can't quantify suffering and impact. We will do a bit of applied anatomy, and look at the psychosocial aspects of chronic illness.

SW 370
SEXUAL HEALTH AND DEVELOPMENT
Undergraduate
This course will introduce students to a variety of topics related to human sexuality. The course will begin with a historical view of sexuality and lead to an analysis of current topics in sexuality related to health and physical development, culture and politics. The format of the course will consist of class meetings every other week and attentive participation to the online discussion board in between class sessions. Students will be required to read articles provided by the instructor and discuss them during class and on the course discussion board. The course will be divided into several modules related to sexual and physical health, relationships and gender issues, atypical sexual behavior and the roles of spirituality, culture, media, gender and aging. Students will participate in class presentations and present research on the web board related to the competencies taken in the class.

SW 371
DINOSAURS
Undergraduate
Dinosaurs are one of the most diverse and successful groups of vertebrates in earth's history. Originating over 220 million years ago, they dominated earth's land biomes for over 150 million years and diversified to include the largest land animals in earth's history, a wide range of aquatic groups, and even a diverse clade capable of flight (the birds). Consequently, mammals remained in the background as small nocturnal creatures during the dinosaurs' long reign. Only after a cataclysmic extinction event 65 million years ago involving most dinosaur groups did the mammals diversify into modern groups including our own primate lineage. This course will introduce students to the remarkable dinosaurs, tracking their origin, surveying their success, and evaluating their decline. Learning will emphasize investigation of the forms, function, and variation within the major dinosaur groups as well as the connections of dinosaur evolution to diverse factors such as climate change, ecology, biological competition, and mass extinction. The course learning activities will encompass discussions, readings, lectures, labs, internet resources, museum resources and original inquiry.

SW 372
MICROCOMPUTERS AND HOME NETWORKING
Undergraduate
In this course, students will be introduced to common computer applications in MS Office: Word, Excel, Power Point, Access and Outlook. Students will also learn how to use browsers as well as learn how to navigate the Web, mark favorite pages, save pages, set options and security levels. We will explore PCs and Mac operating system environments; reviewing their similarities and differences. Finally, we will develop basic technical skills in designing and managing home networks in terms of connections, security, and wireless systems.
SW 300
SUSTAINABILITY AND PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE
Undergraduate
Environmental sustainability problems are multidimensional and interconnected to both the earth and human relationships. In this course, students will analyze their workplace, organization or a desired professional setting using the principles of environmental sustainability and recognized best practices. On the basis of this analysis, they will make recommendations. Students will learn to use decision tools and data to conduct this analysis and make strategic environmentally sustainable decisions within their professions. Learners will explore how to make complex and current science content relevant, accessible, and personal. They will be able to explain the science behind sustainability and environmental management, as well as how sustainability connects with the human dimensions of organizational relationships. Additionally, this course will provide a hands-on approach to allow learners to acquire the analytic, communication, and work skills required to be problem-solving professionals and contributors to human sustainability within organizations.

T&L 400
CLINICAL EXPERIENCES WITH INFANTS AND TODDLERS
Graduate
Teacher candidates will observe and interact with infants and toddlers (25 clock hours). Appropriate lesson planning and assessment techniques and tools will be emphasized in the seminar.

T&L 401
CLINICAL EXPERIENCE IN EARLY LANGUAGE AND LITERACY DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
Teacher candidates will observe and interact with young children and their families in programs, related to language and literacy development. A weekly seminar is required.

T&L 402
CLINICAL EXPERIENCES WITH PRE-SCHOOLERS
Graduate
Candidates will observe and interact with preschool-age children (25 clock hours). Appropriate early childhood curricula, assessment and instructional methodologies will be emphasized. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 407.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 403
CLINICAL EXPERIENCES IN PRIMARY GRADES
Graduate
Students will observe, interact with, and teach primary-age children (25 clock hours). Appropriate curricula, assessment and instructional methodologies for children in the primary grades (K-3) will be emphasized.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 404
INTRODUCTION TO ELEMENTARY EDUCATION
Graduate
This is the first in a sequence of theory and practice courses that serves to familiarize teaching candidates with the world of elementary and middle schools. Through observation and participation in schools, self-reflection, independently created assignments, cooperative learning assignments and classroom discussion, candidates will acquire familiarity with schools and classrooms including: social/cultural context, classroom climate, classroom management, curricular coherence, standards-based instruction, and teacher professional beliefs and practices. Written critical reflections and papers serve as initial foundation for the development of teaching philosophies. COREQUISTES: For T&L EE majors, concurrent enrollment in SCG 403 and T&L 583 is required.

T&L 406
LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT OF THE YOUNG CHILD
Graduate
This course will focus on the development of language in young children, including techniques and materials for use in assessing and enhancing speech and language development with appreciation for dialectic variations. Emphasis will be on issues relating to second language learners and young children with special needs.
T&L 407
PREPRIMARY PROGRAMS: CURRICULUM AND STRATEGY
Graduate

Students will plan, implement and evaluate activities that promote the physical, emotional, social, spiritual, creative, and cognitive development of preschool children from diverse cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds. Methods of facilitating children's play, individualization through building on children's experiences, learning styles and interests, using technology, and developing learning centers will be emphasized. Assessment practices are incorporated in this experience.

T&L 409
PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS
Graduate

This course is an introduction to the professional roles required of elementary school teachers. Students will develop a knowledge-based framework for considering the many factors involved in decision-making in an elementary classroom. This framework will serve to guide students as they create a social studies curriculum unit, which integrates planning skills, teaching strategies, classroom management and evaluation techniques. Daytime clinical hours are required during this course. (Only for Special and Elementary Education (SEE) majors).

T&L 410
CHILDREN’S LITERATURE AND FAMILY LITERACY
Graduate

This course addresses literacy development in young children and the roles of families and early childhood programs in fostering that development. Strategies for enhancing literacy, such as word play, storytelling, conversations will be provided and all appropriate genres of children's literature will be explored. Finally, the course features appropriate poetry, early books for infants and toddlers, read-aloud materials, and all genres of children's literature for young children.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 411
ASSESSMENT IN EARLY CHILDHOOD SPECIAL EDUCATION
Graduate

Candidates will study, use, and evaluate early childhood assessment methods and tools that are appropriate for young children with diverse learning, cultural, and socioeconomic experiences. Focus of the course is on the teacher candidate's acquisition of knowledge and skill regarding an array of formal and informal assessment instruments and techniques used to gather information needed for making decisions about typical and atypical children served in individual and group learning situations. Focus is directed toward the development of curricular goals and instructional approaches that evolve from the assessment information. Such information is used to create learning plans, including Individualized Family Service Plans (IFSP) and Individualized Education Plans (IEP), serving child and family responsively.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 412
EMERGING READING AND LANGUAGE ARTS
Graduate

This course focuses on the curriculum content and sequence, instructional and assessment strategies as well as considerations integral to the creation of authentic, effective emergent literacy environments and engagements for pre-kindergarten through third grade. Theory and practice principles are woven into course assignments and required field experiences designed to observe, teach, and reflect upon instructional decisions made for individual as well as groups of children. Prevailing curricular and instructional models (e.g., code-based, meaning-oriented, balanced) and their histories are compared and contrasted. The influences of development, home language(s) and dialect(s) (especially those of U.S. metropolitan areas), and educational settings are studied and applied to candidate instructional planning and teaching. Case studies and lesson planning facilitate the application of course content. COREQUISTES: For T&L EE majors, concurrent enrollment in T&L 415 and T&L 583 is required.

(T&L 404 or T&L 408) and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.
T&L 413
READING/LANGUAGE ARTS IN THE MIDDLE GRADES
Graduate
This course extends Emerging Reading and Language Arts to facilitate increased independence in students as strategic readers and competent writers. It focuses on the further development of reading comprehension and writing abilities in the intermediate grades and middle school. Emphasis is placed on the complex nature of literacy addressing issues such as content-area literacies, learning in and across languages, and critically consuming and producing a wide variety of texts (including online, multimedia and print based). Application of course material is facilitated through fieldwork focusing on the design, teaching, and reflection on literacy lesson(s) for intermediate learners. COREQUISITES: T&L 412 and concurrent enrollment in LSI 446 and T&L 583 in a public school is required. T&L 413 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or admission in the SEE program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 415
TEACHING AND LEARNING ELEMENTARY SCHOOL SCIENCE
Graduate
This course is an introduction to materials, methods and strategies for helping students in grades K-8 become scientifically literate: ie., to understand the nature of science and its impact on technology. Particular attention will be given to theoretical views about how children learn science, the proper use of materials and equipment, the development of scientific thinking, e.g., skills in observing, classifying, collecting, and interpreting data, questioning strategies, and ways to assess student progress. Inquiry-based lesson plans and case studies invite application of course content. Daytime field required during this course. COREQUISITES: T&L 412 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 416
TEACHING AND LEARNING ELEMENTARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS
Graduate
This course is an introduction to materials, processes for developing, and strategies for mathematical literacy in grades K-8. Particular attention will be given to the theoretical views about how children learn mathematics, the proper use of manipulative materials, the development of mathematical thinking, e.g., skills in estimation, pattern recognition, or spatial perception; the use of technology, and ways to assess student progress. Lesson planning, teaching, and critical reflection are an integral component of this course. Clinical hours required. COREQUISITES: T&L 412 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 418
LEARNING THROUGH THE ARTS
Graduate
This course focuses on the arts (visual art, music, drama and dance) as an integral component of teaching and learning in the elementary school curriculum. Students will explore a variety of art forms and disciplines to develop a critical aesthetic and artistic vocabulary. Students learn to help children utilize artistic media in the exploration and expression of thoughts and feelings. Emphasis is placed on design, construction, and implementation, and assessment of authentic conceptual classroom arts activities that integrate the arts with other classroom curricula. Daytime clinical hours (10) are required during this course. Formerly CDG 418. COREQUISITES: T&L 412 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 419
CURRICULUM AND STRATEGIES: SOCIAL STUDIES
Graduate
This course is an introduction to an integrated view of social studies for engaged citizenship. Through the study of strategies (such as concept formation, historical inquiry, role-play, etc), materials (such as primary sources) teacher candidates will learn and apply principles of curricular integration to create curriculum/units that engage elementary learners in the exploration of issues, ideas, and perspectives that impact our world. COREQUISITES: T&L 412 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.
T&L 420
MATH AND SCIENCE IN EARLY CHILDHOOD
Graduate
This course applies child development principles to the planning of science and mathematics experiences for both typically and atypically developing young children. Emphasis is placed on understanding how children develop problem-solving skills, and on recognizing how teachers can facilitate inquiry-discovery experiences for young children with diverse learning styles and needs. Course assignments include participation in experiments and field-based experiences in mathematics and sciences. Teacher candidates are required to develop and provide developmentally and culturally appropriate activities in science and mathematics activities for young children.
SCG 404, T&L 432, and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 421
CHILD AND FAMILY IN THE URBAN COMMUNITY
Graduate
This course focuses on understanding the diversity of children and families in approaches to development, learning, and disability. Strategies in developing positive and supportive relationships with families of young children with special needs, including family-centered practices, will be explored. Particular attention is given to the challenges faced by teachers and other professionals in early intervention in assessing children’s needs and providing services, which are reflective of the child’s development within his/her diverse cultural and community context. In addition, the course examines ways to develop and maintain productive and collaborative relationships among professionals and families, communities, and other professionals across the range of support systems in the IFSP and IEP planning processes.

T&L 422
CLASSROOM ASSESSMENT
Graduate
This course focuses on study, use, and evaluation of assessment practices in diverse, K-8 contexts. Assessment is addressed as part of instructional systems, attending to issues including: the appropriate use of standardized measures, formal and informal classroom assessment, portfolio development, as well as reporting to all stakeholders. This course also emphasizes ways of involving students and parents in assessment processes, how to observe and assess children individually and in classroom settings, and the use of numerous technologies as components of a classroom assessment system.
Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 423
FUNCTIONAL BEHAVIOR ASSESSMENT: POSITIVE BEHAVIORAL SUPPORT AND INTERVENTION METHODS
Graduate
This course is designed to prepare early childhood pre-service teachers to work with children who present a variety of challenging behaviors in the classroom. Grounded in principles of Applied Behavior Analysis, the philosophy of the course is based on the premise that understanding the underlying causes of children's externalizing and internalizing behavior enables the teacher to utilize appropriate techniques in conducting behavior intervention and classroom management. Using Positive Behavioral Support and Functional Behavior Analysis (a competency required for all teachers under the provisions of IDEA), students will learn how to design and develop a Behavior Intervention Plan. Diverse methods for addressing a variety of behaviors are explored and practiced through field-based assignments that include application of behavioral assessment and intervention tools, as well as techniques. Understanding the impacts of current legislation, policy and research on practice is fostered and developed.
SCG 404 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 424
INTRODUCTION TO SECONDARY EDUCATION
Graduate
This course is an introduction to the DePaul Secondary Education program as well as the professional world of secondary school teaching. In this course, candidates develop the knowledge and skills necessary for being a reflective practitioner. Candidates focus on understanding themselves (professional identity) and their behaviors in teaching situations with students in schools. These insights, combined with subject-matter knowledge, guide the development of various course assignments. Candidates will learn how to observe effectively in a school setting, to identify school governance issues, to understand school environment and the current social issues that shape it, and will experience a variety of teaching methods and resources for their future teaching. Candidates will acquire knowledge of important social concepts and theories that affect education, especially as they affect educational change in urban societies. As candidates become aware of differences in individual, ethnic, and cultural group attitudes, values and needs, they also will learn to recognize the complexities of teaching and learning in a pluralistic society. Candidates will be committed to teaching as responsible professionals who act ethically as well as in a collegial fashion. In addition to class attendance, candidates are required to complete 15 daytime fieldwork hours as part of the course. It is highly recommended that this course be taken concurrently with SCG 406.
T&L 425
CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION IN SECONDARY EDUCATION
Graduate
This course will examine materials, methods, and techniques appropriate for teaching in secondary schools. Topics include writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, understanding classroom management and assessment related issues. Students will be encouraged to reflect upon their own emerging educational philosophies as well as draw from previous courses they have taken. Students will be given many opportunities for planning, using and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies while preparing and teaching a micro lesson in front of their peers. Students will be committed to teaching as a professional acting responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian Personalism. 30 hours Level 1 Field Experience required.

T&L 426
TEACHING WRITING
Graduate
Prepares teacher candidates for teaching writing and composition at the middle and secondary school levels. The course focuses upon methods of teaching composition, examination of literature and research about the composing process, the development of language and reading skills, and the assessment and evaluation of writing. The development of writing curriculums will also be explored. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required
T&L 425 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 427
YOUNG EXCEPTIONAL CHILD: METHODS AND CHARACTERISTICS
Graduate
This course is a survey of the field of early childhood special education, including the Early Intervention System. Characteristics of infants, toddlers, and young children with special needs are examined in this course. Methods of working with different disabilities during children's early years will be explored. Strengths and needs of families of young children with disabilities and collaboration with family members will be emphasized. Understanding the impacts of current legislation, policy, and research on practice is fostered and developed. Completing 15 hours of field experience in an early childhood special education setting is a part of this course's requirements.
SCG 404 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 428
TEACHING LITERATURE
Graduate
Prepares teacher candidates for teaching literature at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in the teaching of literature, explores methods of teaching major literary genres, addresses problems of literacy and focuses on the transactional nature of reading and writing. Emphasis on developing a repertoire of ways of teaching literature and a variety of literature curriculums. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.
T&L 425 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 429
TEACHING YOUNG ADULT LITERATURE
Graduate
This course is devoted to the study of Young Adult Literature: an exciting, emerging field. Issues and ideas to be examined include the following: current debates regarding issues in curriculum and teaching; selecting, reading, evaluating, and teaching young adult literature; cultivation of life-long reading habits and literacy development. Students will become familiar with major writers of young adult literature, read diverse texts, explore major genres, review award winning novels, consider the role of the media, and develop creative projects.
T&L 425 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.
T&L 430
TEACHING LITERACY K-12
Graduate
This course provides an overview of the curriculum, instruction, and assessment strategies used in K-12 classrooms to foster and develop students' L1 and L2 literacies. Through guided examination of prevailing theories of language acquisition and development that currently influence classroom practices across the K-12 continuum, this course enables future teachers of world languages to grow in their understanding of the literacy-learning contexts that students will bring to their language classrooms. Issues that emerge in planning and conducting literacy instruction in schools are discussed and deliberated through university classroom experiences as well as required field experiences (15 hours, minimum; level 1). Course participants enjoy multiple opportunities to apply and analyze theories; to observe, critique, and practice instructional strategies; to make informed curricular and instructional decisions; and to use assessment to inform one's planning.

T&L 431
EARLY LANGUAGE AND LITERACY DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course will focus on enhancing language development and promoting early literacy in young children. It addresses instruction and assessment of language and literacy skills. Students will learn how family/child and teacher/child interactions promote language and literacy development and learning. Implementation of language and literacy curricula and activities that lead to growth in the key areas of literacy development for preschool and primary aged children will be explored. (Combination of previous T&L 406 and T&L 412).

T&L 432
EARLY CHILDHOOD CURRICULUM STRATEGIES AND PHILOSOPHY (BIRTH-8)
Graduate
Operating from a constructivist curricular perspective that considers individual child and the social learning context, candidates will plan, implement and evaluate activities that promote the physical, emotional, social, spiritual, aesthetic, creative, and cognitive development of young children from diverse cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds. Methods of facilitating children's play; individuation through building on children's experiences, learning styles and interests; using technology and, developing learning centers will be emphasized. A variety of teaching methods and classroom management strategies will be discussed and illustrated, including teacher led instruction and student-centered instruction. Students will be encouraged to reflect upon their own emerging educational philosophies and teaching styles as they take part in laboratory and field experiences. Many opportunities for planning, using and evaluating a variety of teaching methods will be offered. Each student will write at least one teaching unit on a primary social studies theme. (Combination of previous T&L 407 and T&L 408)

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 433
EARLY CHILDHOOD SPECIAL EDUCATION STRATEGIES
Graduate
This course focuses on a range of curricular and instructional strategies that foster individual abilities and meet the individual learning needs within the contexts of group and individualized instruction in a variety of learning situations: classrooms, community and home environments. Teacher candidates acquire knowledge and skill to develop individual long-term and short-term educational service plans based on knowledge of children's needs and abilities; families' goals, priorities, and concerns for their children; communities; content areas; and early childhood curriculum goals. (Replaced HSC 408).

T&L 434
LITERACY, LITERATURE, & THE YOUNG CHILD
Graduate
This course addresses the phenomenal process of literacy development in young children. Strategies for enhancing literacy through unlocking the phonemic code, acquiring vocabulary, and comprehending oral as well as print messages are emphasized within the context of choosing and using high-quality literature for children from birth through age 8. Curriculum content and sequence, instructional strategies, and assessment processes are interwoven across course assignments and field experiences. The influences of development, home languages and dialects (especially those of U.S. metropolitan areas), and educational settings are studied and applied to candidates' instructional planning and teaching.

SCG 404 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.
T&L 436
TEACHING AND LEARNING SECONDARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS
Graduate
Prepares teacher candidates for teaching mathematics at the middle school and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in teaching mathematics, methods of teaching secondary mathematics, and recent history in mathematics curriculum development of alternative teaching strategies and the implementation of the NCTM Standards. Lesson and unit development, evaluation and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 439
METHODS OF SECONDARY SCIENCE EDUCATION
Graduate
This course is designed to update teachers in the methods of teaching science. This involves reviewing the processes of science, theories of learning, and instructional strategies appropriate to laboratory science. This course also provides an update on the current trends and issues in science education as well as an analysis of successful science curricula programs. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 440
EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION CROSS-CULTURAL STUDIES
Graduate
The course will discuss the historical, philosophical and cultural foundations of the education of young children in a multicultural society, emphasizing the role of ethnicity in development of young children within the context of families, childcare centers, and educational systems. Topics include: history of immigration and predictions for the future; the effects of population shifts on the education of English Language Learners; the impact of laws, litigation and executive orders on bilingual/English-as-a-Second-Language education; understanding cultural and linguistic differences regarding locating and using educational resources.

T&L 441
EARLY CHILDHOOD METHODS AND MATERIALS FOR ENGLISH LANGUAGE LEARNERS
Graduate
This course focuses on best practices in teaching and learning in ESL and bilingual early childhood classroom contexts. Students will learn about different approaches and methodologies currently used to support the development of listening, speaking, reading and writing in social and academic contexts in learners of English as a second language. Curriculum based-assessment, cultural awareness and self-reflective practice will also be addressed.

T&L 442
EARLY LITERACY DEVELOPMENT AND SECOND LANGUAGE ACQUISITION
Graduate
This course will examine the process of learning and using a second language. Research in second language acquisition (SLA) is multi-disciplinary in nature, reflecting the complexity of language learning and use. Linguistic, psychological and social processes that underlie language(s) learning and use will be introduced and applied to the understanding of this learning in young children. In this course, language acquisition theory concerning relationships between early literacy and oral language development in first and subsequent languages will be addressed.

T&L 443
ASSESSING YOUNG BILINGUAL/ESL LEARNERS
Graduate
This course will focus on the discussion of basic principles and current approaches to assessment of language learning students in ESL Children’s language learning or language learning of children in EST and bilingual early childhood and early elementary educational settings. The different purposes of process and product assessment tools, authentic and curriculum-based forms of assessment, issues in the assessment of English Language Learners (ELLs), and assessment in academic areas for early elementary ELLs will be explored.
T&L 444
EARLY CHILDHOOD BILINGUAL/ ESL PRACTICUM
Graduate
This course will focus on application of the theories in effective teaching practices, and assessment procedures appropriate for young English Language learners. It will emphasize on application of knowledge gained from previous ESL/ELL courses, and demonstration of skills necessary to work collaboratively and effectively with families of young English Language learners. Professional behaviors that respect, value, and support all children's native language and culture will be reinforced.

T&L 440, T&L 441, T&L 442, T&L 443, T&L 444, BBE 408 and BBE 409 or permission of the ECE Program Director are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 449
STANDARD AND CONTENT-BASED METHODS OF TEACHING WORLD LANGUAGES K-12
Graduate
This course prepares candidates to teach world languages at the elementary, middle and secondary school levels consonant with an aligned approach to meeting national and state WLE standards and Common Core standards. It examines the theory and practice of traditional or standard methods of teaching world languages (e.g., communicative approach, natural approach, etc.) with an emphasis on developing alternative, post-method strategies and using diverse resources, as well as on reformulating world languages instruction to integrate subject matter content into the curriculum, including science, social studies, math, fine arts, etc. Engages candidates in understanding and applying the 7Five Cs? - Communication, Cultures, Connections, Comparisons, and Communities outlined in the national standards - toward this end. Lesson and unit development, evaluation/assessment, and classroom management also will be discussed. Issues that emerge in planning and instruction are discussed and deliberated through university classroom experiences as well as required fieldwork (20/15 hours; level 1 in language of certification).

T&L 453
TEACHING HISTORY AND SOCIAL SCIENCE IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS
Graduate
Teaching, History and Social Science in Secondary Schools. Prepares for teaching history and social sciences at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines the nature and purpose of history and social sciences curriculum within secondary schools, the current status of social studies materials and practices, and issues confronting today's secondary social studies teachers. Emphasis on alternative teaching strategies, resources for teaching and learning, teachers' responsibilities in curriculum development and decision-making, and methods and materials for addressing cultural diversity. Lesson and unit development, evaluation and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 455
READINGS IN AMERICAN HISTORY
Graduate
Prepares students for teaching American history at the secondary level. Readings focus on the foundational texts of American history from the colonial era to the late 20th century, with an emphasis on gaining content knowledge and applying it to teaching in the secondary classroom. Class discussions focus on matters of interpretation, evidence, and historiography. Offered during Fall and Summer terms.

T&L 425 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 465
ART AND PEDAGOGY
Graduate
This course alongside T&L 466 is intended as a two-course sequence each complementing the other. As T&L 466 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art's content, T&L 465 focuses on teaching visual art. Building from the content requirements from their program or experience, students will understand how the art studio (content) experiences where ideas are developed translate to the preparation of teaching. Students will do this through multiple curriculum based projects intended for use in their own classrooms, including a 6th - 12th grade general course reader to assist in introducing an art historical overview that influences and connects to general middle and high school studio practices. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the coursework they have done in the content area as well as watching and learning from classroom teachers and teaching artists in the field. They will contemplate such questions as: "What are the connections among the arts disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the middle and high school levels? What are the differences among the arts disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about artists, artistic periods and the nature of how artworks are produced. Site visits required. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.
T&L 466
TEACHER AS ARTIST
Graduate
This course builds on the work in T&L 465, which alongside T&L 466 is intended as a two-course sequence each complementing the other. As T&L 465 focuses on the art of teaching the visual arts, T&L 466 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art content. Historically, artistic movements have shaped and currently identify the theories we use to define our most immediate environment. The major concepts can be connected to the artist studio and to the descriptions some artists make about the studio as a teaching space. In the course students will be introduced to a wide range of artists and their work, artistic movements and the individual artists who use teaching as a medium. How does an emerging artist or pre-service teaching artist draw on the understanding of their own work as a platform to build core principles of pedagogy? What is the link that combines a dynamic studio practice with an inspired methodology for teaching visual art? We will address these questions through creating a visual art teaching curriculum portfolio and writing a reflective artist monograph, produce a final exhibition of art and work alongside teachers and artists in the field. Site visits are required. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and Advanced Standing are a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 480
INTERNSHIP WITH INFANTS AND TODDLERS
Graduate
Candidates conduct 75 hours of intense supervised fieldwork in an infant/toddler center where they are observing and documenting behavior and interactions, planning activities, and assessing development in children ages birth to 3. Candidates will also participate in a twice a quarter, hour and a half, seminar to reflect and discuss aspects of infant/toddler development and care, making connections between theory and practice. Onsite meetings with groups of candidates will be held weekly for supervision and reflection on practice.

T&L 481
INTERNSHIP IN PRESCHOOL SETTING (75 CLOCK HOURS OF SUPERVISED EXPERIENCE)
Graduate
Candidates conduct 75 hours of intense supervised field work in preschool during the winter quarter. The internship is designed for advanced ECE candidates to be taken before student teaching. Candidates taking this internship have either taken ECE 310: Preprimary Programs: Curriculum and Strategy (at the undergraduate level), and T&L 432: ECE Curriculum Strategies and Philosophy (at the graduate level) in a previous quarter, or they are taking these courses as co-requisites with this internship.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 482
INTERNSHIP IN PRIMARY SETTING (75 CLOCK HOURS OF SUPERVISED EXPERIENCE)
Graduate
Candidates conduct 75 hours of intense supervised field work in a primary grade (K-3) during the spring quarter. The internship is designed for advanced ECE candidates to be taken before student teaching. Candidates taking this internship have either taken ECE 311: Curriculum and Instruction in Primary Grades (at the undergraduate level), and T&L 432: ECE Curriculum Strategies and Philosophy (at the graduate level) in a previous quarter, or they are taking these courses as co-requisites with this internship.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 525
READING, WRITING, AND COMMUNICATING ACROSS THE CURRICULUM
Graduate
This course analyzes the relationships among reading, writing, speaking and listening. It encourages middle level and high school teachers in all disciplines to take these interrelationships into account and to plan curricula that include current teaching strategies to enable students to become better readers, writers and thinkers in their various content-areas. This course will also concentrate on group process and its role in effective teaching within and across content-areas. Language use, learning and teaching are considered from a multicultural perspective. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

TCH 471 or TCH 472 or TCH 473 or TCH 474, and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.
T&L 565
INDEPENDENT STUDIO TOPICS
Graduate
This course is a self-directed graduate course in the Visual Arts Education Program. Candidates who consider this course must develop a written proposal for their work and identify professional expectations of this quarter long immersion in advanced study. Candidates may select from a range of possible pursuits from preparing a new body of work or preparing an exhibition to working within a host of selected museums or galleries as an art education intern throughout the city and suburbs. All candidates are required to meet with a faculty member for an initial interview to discuss contact hours, needs and limitations, critique times and locations and the required documentation from the 11 week experience. All proposals must be approved by a faculty member in the program.

T&L 575
WLE HISTORY, POLICY, AND CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT
Graduate
This course engages students in WLE curriculum development and language program advocacy, creation, and sustainability based on an examination of federal and state WLE history and policies and on a review of national and state standards. Reviews theory and application of curriculum development to world language instructional programs, such as design, scope and sequence, organizational patterns, materials and media, teacher training, parent and community involvement, and evaluation. Principal world language education program models are examined and analyzed in light of WLE history, policy, and standards (20/15 hours; level 1).
T&L 449, BBE 407, BBE 526, BBE 560 and BBE 570 are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 583
FIELD EXPERIENCE LAB
Graduate
This field-based course will facilitate pre-service teacher candidates' experiences working in elementary and middle school classrooms. This supervised field experience is an opportunity to apply content and pedagogical knowledge in authentic settings. 24 clock hours are scheduled at school sites and visible during registration though subject to modification based on changes in schools' schedules. Students will enroll in this course multiple times during their program across diverse sites and will engage in different activities aligned with concurrent courses.
COREQUISITES: For T&L EE majors, T&L 404 and SCG 403; or T&L 412 and T&L 416; or T&L 413 and LSI 446.

T&L 584
PRE-STUDENT TEACHING FIELD EXPERIENCE
Graduate
This field-based experience occurs in teacher candidates' student teaching sites. Scheduling is negotiated between teacher candidate and mentor teacher based on classroom social studies and science content area schedule. This supervised field experience is an opportunity to apply content and pedagogical knowledge as well as gain introductory contextual understandings of student teaching site. For T&L EE majors, completed application to student teaching. COREQUISITES: For T&L EE majors, T&L 419 and T&L 415.

T&L 585
ELEMENTARY STUDENT TEACHING
Graduate
Students will be placed for a minimum of 10 weeks in an elementary school. Seminar will meet once a week, in the participating schools and/or at DePaul. At first, they will focus on issues of immediate concern to student teachers. As the students gain experience the seminar will examine six or eight classroom issues, that is, topics which students have found to be significant on the basis of their experience. These would include such things as assessment, evaluation, classroom management, curriculum planning, and relationships with colleagues. After delineating what the issues are, students would be expected to analyze and discuss readings which relate to the issues. Open only to DePaul students.

T&L 586
ELEMENTARY STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR
Graduate
This course is taken concurrently with T&L 585, Elementary Student Teaching. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and careers as teachers. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 585

T&L 588
INDEPENDENT STUDY IN TEACHING AND LEARNING
Graduate
PREREQUISITE(S): Permission of instructor, department chair and Associate Dean.
T&L 589
THEESIS RESEARCH IN TEACHING AND LEARNING
Graduate
A student writing a thesis registers for this course for four quarter hours of credit. Where the thesis research and the writing of the thesis itself are prolonged beyond the usual time, the program advisor may require the student to register for additional credit.

SCG 451 and an approved thesis proposal is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 590
SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING
Graduate
Students will be placed for a minimum of 10 weeks in a secondary school. Seminar will meet once a week, in the participating schools and/or at DePaul. At first, they will focus on issues of immediate concern to student teachers. As the students gain experience, the seminar will examine six or eight classroom issues; that is, topics which students have found to be significant on the basis of their experience. These would include such topics as assessment, evaluation, classroom management, curriculum planning, and relationships with colleagues. After delineating what the issues are, students would be expected to analyze and discuss readings that relate to the issues. Open only to DePaul students.

T&L 591
SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR
Graduate
This course is taken concurrently with T&L 590, Secondary Student Teaching. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and careers as teachers. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 590

T&L 592
WORLD LANGUAGES STUDENT TEACHING
Graduate
Student teaching is the culminating experience of the World Languages certification program. It is a ten-week, 30-hour/week experience. Students must successfully complete student teaching with a grade of B- or better in a language classroom in which they are seeking certification to teach. The course is taken concurrently with T&L 593, World Languages Seminar. Open only to DePaul students.

T&L 593
WORLD LANGUAGES SEMINAR
Graduate
This course is taken concurrently with T&L 592, World Languages Student Teaching. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and careers as teachers. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 592

T&L 595
EARLY CHILDHOOD STUDENT TEACHING
Graduate
This course requires students to participate in supervised teaching at a cooperating school, five full days per week, for an academic quarter. Part of the teaching will be in a preprimary setting and part will be in a primary setting. Feedback and discussion of issues encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching will be included. Open only to DePaul students.

T&L 596
EARLY CHILDHOOD STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR
Graduate
In this seminar, candidates will reflect upon their teaching experiences with young children, and collaborate with colleagues and instructor to identify alternative strategies for problematic situations. Candidates will outline ways to maintain strategies for lifelong learning. In addition, candidates will share resume development and job-search strategies. COREQUISITE: T&L 595.
T&L 600
REGISTERED STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING
Graduate
Registration is this course is open to students who are not registered for any other courses but need to complete requirements/assignments for previously taken courses. It provides access to University facilities. Permission of advisor required.
Status as a student in a College of Education Advanced Master's program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 611
INDUCTION INTO THE TEACHING PROFESSION: SECONDARY
Graduate
This course is designed to assist first-year secondary teachers to make the transition from student teaching to teacher. The course creates a bridge between first-year teachers' formal education and the realities of their classrooms. In particular, the course provides assistance with the following: 1) understanding their induction into the profession; 2) analyzing their new educational contexts; 3) actualizing their educational philosophies; 4) developing their pedagogical knowledge; and 5) identifying and making the most of professional support systems within their schools.
T&L 590 is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 614
INDUCTION INTO THE TEACHING PROFESSION: EARLY CHILDHOOD
Graduate
This course is designed to assist first-year early childhood teachers in making the transition from student teaching to teacher. It creates a bridge between first-year teachers' formal education and the realities of their classrooms, providing assistance with: understanding their induction into the profession; analyzing their new educational contexts; actualizing their educational philosophies; developing their pedagogical knowledge; and identifying and making the most of professional support systems within their schools.
T&L 595 is a prerequisite for this course.

T&L 615
SPECIAL TOPICS IN TEACHING AND LEARNING
Graduate
Current issues and problems in education will be discussed. Focus will be current research and best practices.

T&L 625
CANDIDACY CULMINATING PROJECT (STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING)
Graduate
Registration in this course is required of all students who are not enrolled in a course but are completing culminating projects for their program of study, including theses, papers, and final portfolios. It provides access to university facilities. Permission of advisor required.
Status as a student in a College of Education Advanced Master's program is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 320
EXPLORING TEACHING IN THE URBAN HIGH SCHOOL
Undergraduate
(JYEL CREDIT) This course is an invitation to secondary education as a profession, an opportunity for students considering education as a career to explore the reality of teaching and learning a disciplinary content area in a variety of Chicago-area schools. Students will become familiar with different narratives of teaching through teacher and student biographies, testimonials, literature, film, and classroom observations. They will explore the interrelationships between, for example, popular cultural beliefs about schooling; teacher and student identities; and classroom interaction. The instructor will coordinate observations in several classrooms as the basis for intensive, guided reflective work, aimed at supporting students' initial and subsequent efforts of developing identities as disciplinary content educators (25 hours of high school classroom observation required). Course is also an introduction to the TEACH Program. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms.
TCH 390
CAPSTONE: INTEGRATING EDUCATION & DISCIPLINARY FOUNDATIONS
Undergraduate
This course is designed to help students conceptualize issues and opportunities in teaching their disciplinary content to diverse students and in different classroom contexts. Up to ten hours of community-based service/observation required. In this course, students will analyze and reflect on how teaching in their disciplines is informed by diverse cultures of schooling and youth, including the influences of economic, social, cultural, political, gender, and religious factors on schooling, educational policy and opportunity. Students will use disciplinary content to critically and creatively reflect on the teaching of that content in secondary schools. Students will be introduced to issues and ways of presenting essential disciplinary content in ways that engage diverse learners, including learners who have not been served well by formal education. Students will also develop a theory of teaching that emphasizes the intersection of disciplinary content with multicultural perspectives. Offered during Spring term only.

TCH 401
TEACHING AS A PROFESSION IN SECONDARY SCHOOL
Graduate
This course is an introduction to the TEACH Program, including the College of Education's conceptual framework and teacher dispositions, and to the professional world of secondary school teaching, including the policy bodies and stakeholders that impact teaching. Within this developing understanding of the larger context of secondary education, students will begin to articulate clearly professional identities and the behaviors inherent in those identities, including their impact on student learning. Drawing on previous coursework and their growing understanding of differences in individual, ethnic, and cultural group attitudes, values, and needs, students also will learn to recognize the complexities of teaching and learning in a pluralistic society. Ultimately, students will be committed to teaching as a responsible professional who acts in an ethical and collegial fashion. 25 Level 2 field experience required. Offered during Fall term only.

TCH 411
THE NATURE OF ENGLISH
Graduate
This course is designed to help students to see that the field of English Studies is bigger than the component they probably identify as English (it's Literature, Writing, and Linguistics/Grammar). Students will explore the formation of the discipline up to the current day, focusing on the shifting understanding of ways of reading, writing and thinking about language. They will strive to answer the questions: "What does it mean to be a student of language and literature?" and, "What are the ways of knowing characteristic of English and Writing, Rhetoric, & Discourse majors?" In doing so, students will relate the disciplinary content of their major to their daily lives and interests and to the larger framework of human endeavor and understanding, including identifying its importance to the personal lives of high school students. The course is a prerequisite for TCH 421. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 412
THE NATURE OF HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES
Graduate
This course builds on the content course work students have done in the seven disciplines grouped under the heading "social sciences" (history, political science, geography, sociology, anthropology, economics, and psychology). In this class students will get further exposure to the basic concepts of the social science disciplines and consider the connections as well as differences between them. The course emphasizes how different disciplinary backgrounds lead students to bring different perspectives to their study of social phenomena and helps them see these phenomena from multiple vantage points. The course will employ a case study approach framed around social issues of interest to all seven disciplines (e.g. social control, threats, development, natural disasters). By the end of the course, students will have applied the knowledge and skills of multiple social science disciplines to evaluate social phenomena, considered the relationship and differences between those disciplines, and be prepared to enter TCH 422 where they will apply their content knowledge to inquiry and teaching in the field. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 413
THE NATURE OF MATHEMATICS
Graduate
This course builds on students' mathematics understanding by emphasizing the universality of mathematics as a cultural endeavor. In it, students will explore the historical trends in mathematic and how those trends have been taught. Students will understand that, mathematics, at its core, is deductive; however, it also requires intuition. Thus, the course examines the interaction among intuition, experimentation, conjecture, abstraction, and deductive reasoning not only in the classroom but also in the everyday use of mathematics. It also examines the interplay between concrete problem-solving and generalization. Offered during Winter term only.
THE NATURE OF SCIENCE
Graduate

This course is about the nature of science and the interactions between science and society. It will build on the foundation of understandings that students already have about the processes and conventions of science developed through their years as science students to create opportunities for deeper understandings of the beliefs and assumptions inherent to the creation of scientific knowledge. These opportunities will be developed through direct interactions with professional scientists as well as through case studies and readings that illustrate the strengths, limits and pitfalls of the scientific endeavor as well as provide opportunities for students to relate science to their daily lives and interests and to a larger framework of human endeavor and understanding (e.g., relationships among systems of human endeavor including science and technology; relationships among scientific, technological, personal, social and cultural values). Cases will be drawn from different scientific disciplines as well as from modern and historic times. In this way, science students will have a better understanding of what it means to be a scientist and how science interfaces with society. The course is a prerequisite for TCH 424. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 421
INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY ENGLISH PEDAGOGY
Graduate

This course builds on TCH 411 by preparing teacher candidates to distinguish between what needs to be taught (content) and how it is taught (pedagogy), with an emphasis on understanding the historical shifts in the teaching of content and how these shifts inform teaching and learning in today's English language arts classrooms. The course also introduces students to methods of inquiry and reflection on content pedagogical knowledge. Student will examine their own educational experience through the lens of the historical trends, focusing on how they learned and what they understood their teachers to be doing. This initial case study will serve as an introduction into case study methods. Students will also develop expertise in one of the three historical trend areas - reading, writing, and language - and examine how the trend has informed teaching and learning and shaped curriculum, pedagogy, and assessment. Students will develop a case study of a practicing teacher using the lens of the historical trend in which they are developing expertise. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 422
INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY HISTORY AND SOCIAL SCIENCES PEDAGOGY
Graduate

This course builds on the content knowledge students developed and reinforced in TCH 412. More, it asks them to make the shift from considering how a person prepared in the social sciences analyzes social phenomena to how such a person teaches the social sciences. Students will do this by developing two units of inquiry-based case studies that they could use in their own classrooms. The topics of these case studies will vary from section to section, depending on the needs of the students and expertise of the instructor. Possible topics include the Constitution, the Cold War, slavery, and the Iraq War. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the course work they have done in the content areas as well as the instruction they see teachers delivering in their field experiences. They will contemplate such questions as: “What are the connections between the social science disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the high school level? What are the differences between the social science disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about social events but also the freedom to pursue their interests and make sense of the world on their own terms?” By the end of this course, students through readings and their projects will have advanced their learning about the nature of inquiry, its implementation in the classroom, and the connections and differences between the social science disciplines. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 412 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 423
INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY MATHEMATICS PEDAGOGY
Graduate

This course builds on TCH 413 by introducing students to inquiry methods to understand the teaching and learning of mathematics. Students will explore how mathematics has been and is taught by examining major paradigm shifts in mathematics education and the impact those paradigms and shifts have on pedagogical content knowledge, or knowledge of how to teach disciplinary content. Students will use case study methods to look at instructional practices and begin to articulate their own mathematics teaching pedagogy. With the completion of this course, students will have a deeper understanding of mathematical literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching mathematics, as well as being able to identify what makes an exceptional math teacher who is able to address the needs of all students. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 413 is a prerequisite for this class.
TCH 424
RESEARCH METHODS & DISCIPLINARY INQUIRY: MATHEMATICS
Graduate
Following TCH 414, this course transitions from asking “what does a scientist do?” to a consideration of why science literacy in the general public has been so difficult to achieve. The focusing questions for TCH 424 are: “How do we teach science? What is science literacy? Why is an understanding of science important to the general public? and What are the major obstacles and strategies to achieving science literacy?” The course begins by participants self-reflecting on their own educational experiences that led to their paths in science education: what have been their successful learning strategies, how have teachers influenced their education and what have been successful (and less than successful) classroom instructional strategies? From this, students will begin science classroom observation, discussing their observations with their peers, and speaking with educators about their experiences teaching high school science and about the goals and short-comings of science education. Throughout this process, students will read seminal literature on science literacy and explore cases challenging their notions of the teacher-learner relationship and the relationship between science and society. As a result of this course, students will gain a deeper understanding of scientific literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching science as well as identify what makes an exceptional science teacher able to prepare both future scientists and a knowledgeable public. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 451
RESEARCH METHODS & DISCIPLINARY INQUIRY: ENGLISH
Graduate
This course introduces students to education research methods and discipline-specific research and inquiry. During the first five weeks, the course focuses on basic questions, issues, and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conducting, writing, reading and using education research as a means for informing education theory, practice and policy. Candidates will be exposed to the multiple frameworks that inform education research and various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data. During the last 6 weeks of the course, the course focuses on research related to the teaching of the English language arts in the middle school and high school and pedagogical content knowledge, including research on teaching and learning, curricula and instructional delivery, assessment, and the relationship of socio-cultural, economic, and language use to teaching and learning disciplinary-specific content. Students will develop and implement small discipline-specific research projects, identifying research questions, conducting a literature search, developing a theoretical framework, and collecting and analyzing data. NOTE: Offered concurrently with TCH 481.

TCH 452
RESEARCH METHODS & DISCIPLINARY INQUIRY: HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the English language arts in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 451 or SCG 451. Offered during Fall term.

T&L 425 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as a TEACH student are prerequisites for this class.

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching history and the social sciences in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 452 or SCG 451. Offered during Fall term.

T&L 425 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as a TEACH student are prerequisites for this class.

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching mathematics in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of mathematics in all its representations. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. T&L 425 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as a TEACH student are prerequisites for this class.
TCH 474
TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 1
Graduate
This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the sciences in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 454 or SCG 451. Offered during Fall term.

T&L 425 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as a TEACH student are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 481
TEACHING ENGLISH IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 2
Graduate
This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 421 and TCH 471. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities, with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 471, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 451 or SCG 451. Offered during Winter term.

TCH 471 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 482
TEACHING HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 2
Graduate
This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 422 and TCH 472. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. TCH 472 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 483
TEACHING MATHEMATICS IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 2
Graduate
This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 423 and TCH 473. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of mathematics in all its representations with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. TCH 473 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.
TCH 484
TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 2
Graduate
This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 424 and TCH 474. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. TCH 474 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 495
ASSESSMENT ISSUES IN SECONDARY EDUCATION
Graduate
This course introduces candidates to theoretical and philosophical issues related to educational assessment. It addresses the range of assessments teachers will encounter in school settings, including individual cognitive and social and emotional assessments; course material, curricula, and disciplinary program assessments; and large scale high-stakes testing. The course provides candidates opportunities to explore student, program, and curricular assessment issues, including assessment methods and tools; standardized, quantitative, and qualitative assessments; formal and informal assessments; formative and summative assessments; integrated, self-, and peer assessments; cultural, social, economic, and language influences on assessments; and issues of reliability and validity in assessment. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms. COREQUISITE(S): Taken in conjunction with TCH 471/TCH 472/TCH 473/ TCH 474 OR TCH 481/TCH 482/TCH 483/TCH 484.

T&L 425 and Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 590
STUDENT TEACHING
Graduate
(6 credit hours) This course is the culminating experience for TEACH Program students and requires 11 weeks of onsite student teaching in a high school content area classroom. The course requires students to be in a high school full-time, participating in both in-class instruction and extra-curricular activities related to the school. Open only to TEACH Program Students; Student teaching application and approval required.

TCH 591
STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR
Graduate
(2 credit hours) This course must be taken concurrently with TCH 590. The seminar format provides students an opportunity to reflect on their student teaching experiences and to reach back and consider what they have learned in the TCH Program and their next steps as practicing teachers. COREQUISITE(S): TCH 590.

TDC 261
BASIC COMMUNICATION SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
(Formerly TDC 361) Introduction to voice, data, and multi-media network communications fundamentals. Wired, Wireless, and Optical applications in Local, Metropolitan, Wide Area Networks are explored. The overview explains how technical, regulatory, competitive, standardization and cultural factors impact modern network applications. Approved for Scientific Inquiry credit. PREREQUISITE(S): NONE.

TDC 311
COMPUTERS IN TELECOMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS
Undergraduate
This course is an introduction to computer architecture and operating systems with an emphasis on network systems. Topics covered include computer components and functions, logic circuits, process management, memory management, file management, interrupts and I/O peripheral devices, as well as computer networks, distributed systems, and network administration. Students will have several hands-on labs utilizing a Linux environment and will use Shell script for basic systems and network administration as well. PREREQUISITE(S): None.
TDC 362
PRINCIPLES OF DATA COMMUNICATIONS
Undergraduate
Theory and components of data communication systems, modes, codes, and error detection techniques for data transmission, network protocols and line control procedures, communication carrier facilities and system planning. PREREQUISITE(S): (TDC 311 or CSC 373) and (IT 263 or TDC 261)

TDC 363
INTRODUCTION TO LOCAL AREA NETWORKS
Undergraduate
This course covers the principles of local area network (LAN) technologies including protocols, hardware, LAN software and design concepts. The course will focus on the lower layers of the OSI model and explore Ethernet, bridging/switching, VLANs, securing the network and Spanning-tree and Rapid-Spanning-tree protocols. Basic inter-VLAN routing will also be investigated. The course will involve several extensive lab exercises and troubleshooting activities to help reinforce the concepts. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 261 or IT 263

TDC 364
VOICE COMMUNICATIONS TECHNOLOGIES
Undergraduate
A detailed study of transmission, signaling and switching systems for facilities-based public and private voice networks. Voice digitization and transmission over circuit-switched and packet-switched infrastructures. Computer telephony integration techniques. Quality of service issues in integrated voice-over-data systems. Course may include laboratory work with PBX lab. PREREQUISITE(S): NONE.

TDC 365
NETWORK INTERCONNECTION TECHNOLOGIES
Undergraduate
A comprehensive study of network interconnection technologies including layer 2 bridges and switches, layer 3 routers and higher-layer gateways. The TCP and IP protocols will be studied in detail, including IP address management and router operations and management along with associated Internet protocols. RIP and OSPF protocols will be considered. Course includes laboratory work with protocol analyzers and router administration. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 363

TDC 368
NETWORK PROGRAMMING
Undergraduate
Programming distributed client/server applications; the sockets interface and multitasking issues; client/server models; remote procedure call; examples of applications such as electronic mail and file transfer. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 261 or CSC 309.

TDC 369
NETWORK PERFORMANCE ANALYSIS AND DESIGN
Undergraduate
Quantitative foundations of network performance analysis. Probability theory and queueing theory will be developed and applied to problems in LAN performance, traffic engineering, and the analysis of throughput and response time measures for data communications networks. Performance tradeoffs in network design. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 223 and MAT 151 and TDC 365.

TDC 371
WIRELESS COMMUNICATIONS NETWORKS
Undergraduate

TDC 372
DIGITAL ACCESS SERVICES
Undergraduate
A survey of access line technologies used to access Internet and other business network services. Topics will include traditional DS1, DS3 and SONET transport as well as Integrated Services Digital Network (ISDN), Digital Subscriber Line (DSL), Cable Modems, satellite services, Asynchronous Transfer Mode (ATM), and wireless data access methods. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 362
TDC 375
NETWORK PROTOCOLS
Undergraduate

TDC 376
NETWORK PROJECT
Undergraduate
Case study in developing a large network project. Students will work in groups to analyze and design a major network system. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 365.

TDC 377
FUNDAMENTALS OF NETWORK SECURITY
Undergraduate
Fundamentals of Network security design and implementation. Review of components used in an enterprise security infrastructure including routers, firewalls, security auditing and assessment tools, Virtual Private Networks (VPN) and Intrusion Detection Systems (IDS). The integration of the different components will be studied in detail, including IP addressing, Network Address Translation (NAT), design of firewall rule sets and performance considerations. Course includes laboratory work with routers, firewalls, Virtual Private Networks and security assessment tools. Pre-req: TDC 365.

TDC 378
INFORMATION STORAGE AND MANAGEMENT
Undergraduate
This course provides a comprehensive overview of network-based storage technology and information storage infrastructure. Major topics include the storage architectures, service features, and benefits of Intelligent Storage Systems. Networked storage technologies include fiber channel (FC), based Storage Area Network (SAN), Network Attached Storage (NAS), and IP-SAN. Advanced storage technologies on Content Addressed Storage (CAS), information security, and storage virtualization are also discussed. PREREQUISITE(S): none

TDC 379
TELECOMMUNICATION AND NETWORK SECURITY PRACTICUM
Undergraduate
Design and implementation of telecommunication and network security infrastructure. This laboratory-based class includes the setup of realistic network infrastructure environment using bridges, routers, layer 2/3 switches and servers. Advanced routing infrastructure implementation using OSPF, RIPv2, EIGRP, BGP, multi-homed BGP setups and IGP/EGP redistribution. Network infrastructure hardening using routers and switches. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 365 or Instructor consent. Good knowledge of TCP/IP is required.

TDC 384
SCRIPTING FOR NETWORK MANAGEMENT
Undergraduate
This is a hands-on course on using script languages to develop practical applications for Network Management. Students will first learn the fundamentals of Linux system and script language(s) for task automation, and use scripts to develop dynamic web sites. After that, the course will cover Simple Network Management Protocol (SNMP), and use Application Programming Interface (API) to automate networks tasks of Fault Management, Configuration Management, Accounting Management, Performance Management, and Security Management (FCAPS). The final project of the course is to develop a dynamic web site with the above five functional areas to manage Linux servers, Ethernet switches and IP routers. Prerequisite: ( IT263 or TDC261) and (CSC211 or CSC261).

TDC 390
TOPICS IN NETWORK TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
May be repeated for credit. PREREQUISITE(S): Completion of TDC 363 and TDC 365 or consent of the instructor.

TDC 399
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Undergraduate
Independent study for variable credit. PREREQUISITE(S): Requires approval of faculty advisor and consent of the Dean.
TDC 405
VOICE AND DATA NETWORK FUNDAMENTALS
Graduate
This course provides an introduction to voice and data networking technologies, including public and private voice services, Ethernet and Internet data technologies, network security, business applications and network management. The structure, regulation, and history of the telecom and data network industry will be discussed as well. PREREQUISITE(S): None

TDC 411
INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER AND NETWORK SYSTEMS
Graduate
This course is an introduction to computer architecture and operating systems with an emphasis on network systems. Topics covered include computer components and functions, logic circuits, process management, memory management, file management, interrupts and I/O peripheral devices, as well as computer networks, distributed systems, and network administration. Students will have several hands-on labs utilizing a Linux and Cisco IOS environment and will use Shell script for basic systems and network administration as well. PREREQUISITE(S): None

TDC 413
INTRODUCTION TO LAN AND WAN
Graduate
This course covers the principles of local area network (LAN) and wide area network (WAN) technologies including structured cabling, protocols, network devices, and network operating systems. Students will learn the theories and practices of designing, provisioning, and deploying LAN and WAN in an enterprise environment. Assigned lab exercises involving LAN/WAN configuration and troubleshooting will help reinforce various concepts. PREREQUISITE(S): None

TDC 431
EMERGING WIRELESS AND MOBILITY NETWORKS
Graduate
A study of evolving 2.5, 3rd & 4th Generation Wireless Networks, and disruptive technologies like WiFi(802.11), WiMax, Bluetooth, RFID, Ultra-Wideband and the security implications mobility networks. This course provides a balanced view of the Wireless Industry in transition, through evolving technology, regulation, competition and standards. Students will be better prepared to deal with the rapid changes and seize the opportunities as data mobility impacts traditional telecommunications and private networks. In addition students will have access to extensive Global Wireless Education Consortium materials to support their individual advanced interests. Formerly TDC 531. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 405

TDC 460
FOUNDATIONS OF NETWORK TECHNOLOGIES
Graduate
An introductory course on network technologies for local and wide area networks. The course examines in detail the core concepts for network architectures, Ethernet systems including wired, wireless, and Metro, virtual local area networks, storage area networks, optical networking, and the more traditional network services such as T-1, frame relay, Asynchronous Transfer Mode (ATM), and SONET. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 405 and TDC 413

TDC 463
COMPUTER NETWORKS AND DATA SYSTEMS
Graduate
A detailed discussion of the upper layers of network architectures. Network protocol organization will be discussed using TCP/IP as an example. IP addresses, subnetting, super netting, and CIDR. Routing algorithms. Transport layer protocols. Application layer protocols. Introduction to IPv6. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 405 and TDC 413

TDC 464
CONVERGED MULTIMEDIA NETWORKS
Graduate
Exploration of multimedia networks including voice, data, and video services offered by network carriers and Internet Service Providers (ISP) to both enterprise and residential customers. The course starts with an overview of current voice and data networks and presents the driving forces leading to a converged multimedia network. The focus is on Voice over IP (VoIP), including signaling, protocols, equipment, network architecture/design, traffic engineering, and service deployment strategy. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 405
TDC 468
NETWORK PROGRAMMING
Graduate
The course covers the basic and advanced issues of TCP/IP networking programming such as multiple processes, I/O multiplexing, multi-threaded processes, multicasting and secure network programming USING C/C++. Application examples such as Internet browsing, instant messaging, proxy filtering and file transfer protocols are discussed. PREREQUISITE(S): (TDC 463 OR CSC 435) and CSC 404

TDC 477
NETWORK SECURITY
Graduate
Network infrastructure security issues, including perimeter security defense, firewalls, Virtual Private Networks, Intrusion Detection Systems, wireless security, network security auditing tools and ethical considerations. Strategies for the deployment of "Defense-In-Depth" mechanisms in an enterprise computing environment. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 463 or CSC 435

TDC 478
INFORMATION STORAGE AND MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This course provides a comprehensive overview of network-based storage technology and information storage infrastructure. Major topics include the storage architectures, service features, and benefits of Intelligent Storage Systems. Networked storage technologies include fiber channel (FC), based Storage Area Network (SAN), Network Attached Storage (NAS), and IP-SAN. Advanced storage technologies on Content Addressed Storage (CAS), information security, and storage virtualization are also discussed. PREREQUISITE(S): none

TDC 484
SCRIPTING FOR NETWORK MANAGEMENT
Graduate
This is a hands-on course on using script languages to develop practical applications for Network Management. Students will first learn the fundamentals of Linux system and script language(s) for task automation, and use scripts to develop dynamic web sites. After that, the course will cover Simple Network Management Protocol (SNMP), and use Application Programming Interface (API) to automate networks tasks of Fault Management, Configuration Management, Accounting Management, Performance Management, and Security Management (FCAPS). The final project of the course is to develop a dynamic web site with the above five functional areas to manage Linux servers, Ethernet switches and IP routers. Prerequisite: TDC 405 and (IT 211 or CSC 401)

TDC 511
TELECOMMUNICATIONS PRACTICUM
Graduate
Introduction to the functionality and management of voice and data communications equipment in the Telecommunications and Local Area Networks laboratories. Emphasis will be on practical understanding and experience through laboratory exercises. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 411 and TDC 460 and TDC 463

TDC 512
CELLULAR AND WIRELESS TELECOMMUNICATIONS
Graduate
A survey course which includes an overview of all the design and network elements that comprise the foundation of today’s cellular networks. Topics include the evolution of cellular technology; basic cellular design and operation principles; cell base station design and function; a review of digital wireless technologies; radio frequency (RF) and antenna propagation basics; an overview of towers; microwave radio systems; roaming and intercarrier networking; the business side of wireless and landline interconnection to the Public Switched Telephone Network (PSTN). PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 464

TDC 514
COMPUTER TELEPHONY
Graduate
A study of enabling technologies allowing the integration of voice communications services with personal computers, LANs and mainframes. Telephony programming interfaces, call management software, intelligent fax/data retrieval and interactive voice response systems will be considered. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 463 and TDC 464.
TDC 532
WIRELESS SYSTEM ENGINEERING AND DEPLOYMENT
Graduate
The course covers technologies and theories that support the design, deployment and operation of modern-day digital wireless networks. The first half of the course will address concepts of RF theory, RF propagation, base station engineering, and antenna propagation. The second half of the course focuses on distributed antenna systems (DAS), and various digital wireless technologies used on modern networks and emerging technologies for the future. IP Multimedia Subsystem (IMS) technology and architectures, along with its interfaces to future wireless networks, will also be addressed. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 512

TDC 542
PROTOCOLS FOR ADVANCED WIRELESS NETWORKS
Graduate
This course provides students with an in-depth study of the advanced wireless communication protocols and technologies. It starts with an overview of the wireless evolution from the first generation network to the modern and future wireless technologies. It will then go on to explore major aspects of each advanced wireless technology: air interface, smart antennas, network infrastructure, network elements and their functions, QoS, security, mobility, and performance. Wireless protocols, including both User-to-Network Interface (UNI) and Network-to-Network Interface (NNI), are also studied in detail. Students will also learn new service opportunities provided by these advanced wireless technologies. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 512

TDC 560
ADVANCED NETWORK TECHNOLOGIES AND DESIGN
Graduate
This course introduces advanced network technologies and design, including Multi-Protocol Label Switching (MPLS), MPLS Virtual Private Networks, IP storage networks, content distribution, capacity planning and traffic engineering. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 460, TDC 463

TDC 562
COMPUTER-COMMUNICATION NETWORK DESIGN & ANALYSIS
Graduate
This course provides an in-depth study of Internet protocols from the perspective of network planning, simulation and troubleshooting. The course includes in-depth study of Internet traffic, traffic measurement techniques, network planning and simulation using simulation tools, and packet management techniques. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 463

TDC 563
PROTOCOLS AND TECHNIQUES FOR DATA NETWORKS
Graduate
Advanced topics in TCP/IP including IPv6, TCP traffic control, routing protocols, multicast routing protocols, and upper layer protocols supporting Quality of Service (QoS) in the new generation of the Internet; compression techniques; introduction to SNA and APPN, SNA and TCP/IP integration. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 463

TDC 567
TELECOMMUNICATION SYSTEMS DESIGN AND MANAGEMENT
Graduate
The theory and practice of Telecommunication system design. Ongoing systems management. Telecommunication management including selection of vendors/systems, structuring an RFP systems proposal analysis, computer aided telecommunications management. Telecommunication management strategies from a business perspective. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 463.

TDC 568
NETWORK MANAGEMENT
Graduate
The five major areas of network management--fault management, performance management, security, accounting and configuration management—are discussed. Advanced topics such as fault diagnosis and isolation, event correlation, MIB design, SNMP programming, performance monitoring, service level agreements and network security architectures are also discussed. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 463.
TDC 577
NETWORK SECURITY II
Graduate
This course is an advanced class in network security. Topics include: Intrusion Detection and Prevention Systems; Security Engineering processes; Advanced firewall considerations; Honeypots; Incident response; Forensics; Enterprise security policy development and complex enterprise security infrastructure design and integration. PREREQUISITE(S) TDC 477 or TDC 572

TDC 593
TOPICS IN TELECOMMUNICATIONS
Graduate
This is an independent study course. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of instructor. Independent study form required.

TDC 594
NETWORK CAPSTONE
Graduate
In this class students will synthesize knowledge from previous courses to design, build, test, and demonstrate a comprehensive network project as members of a project team. Topics introduced or reviewed, and used in completing the project, will include network requirement analysis, network architecture design, vendor evaluation, planning, experimental design, physical design, logical design, security design, testing strategy, documentation, change management, and network management strategy. Other topics include reasoning about uncertain user requirements, negotiation, online meeting techniques, and group dynamics. The capstone course will extensively use the DLPOD environment and the OPNET for network design and experiment. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 511 and TDC 560 and TDC 563

TDC 597
TOPICS IN DATA COMMUNICATIONS
Graduate
This is an independent study course. (PREREQUISITE(S):Consent of instructor. Independent Study form required).

TDC 599
INDEPENDENT STUDY
Graduate
Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable Credit.

TDC 690
RESEARCH SEMINAR
Graduate
Readings and discussion on current research topics. Students may register for this course no more than twice. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of the instructor.

TDC 696
MASTER’S PROJECT
Graduate
(4 credit hours) Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their project. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor. Independent study form required.

TDC 698
MASTER’S THESIS
Graduate
(2 credit hours) Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their thesis. Students must continue to register for this course every quarter after their first registration in it until they complete their project or thesis to the satisfaction of their advisor. They earn two hours of credit for each such registration but only four hours of credit will apply for degree credit. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor. Independent study form required.
TEC 104
INTRODUCTION TO THEATRE TECHNOLOGY
Undergraduate
(3 quarter hours) This course introduces students to technical systems and standard technical theatre practices. The course emphasizes proper industry-accepted nomenclature of systems, tools, materials, and integrated infrastructure and introduces the steps involved in larger processes. In addition, a specific focus of the course is the establishing of collaborative team work between peers.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 105
INTRODUCTION TO STAGE MANAGEMENT
Undergraduate
Intro to Stage Management is a required class which takes place during the fall quarter of the stage management students' first year. The class covers a combination of stage management methods used at The Theatre School and best professional practices for the beginning stage manager. Visits to The Theatre School shops and discussions with shop supervisors introduce the first year stage managers to the needs, requirements, and preferred professional methods as defined by the construction processes of the shops.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 107
THEATRE CREW
Undergraduate
Theatre Crew (2 quarter hours) All students in the first year of the program are assigned on a rotating basis throughout the year to various crews which build and run the shows in the Showcase, Playworks, New Directors, and Workshop Series.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 108
THEATRE CREW
Undergraduate
Theatre Crew (2 quarter hours) All students in the first year of the program are assigned on a rotating basis throughout the year to various crews which build and run the shows in the Showcase, Playworks, New Directors, and Workshop Series.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 109
THEATRE CREW
Undergraduate
Theatre Crew (2 quarter hours) All students in the first year of the program are assigned on a rotating basis throughout the year to various crews which build and run the shows in the Showcase, Playworks, New Directors, and Workshop Series.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 120
SOUND SOFTWARE
Undergraduate
This class is an overview of the computer programs Sound Design majors will need to create their work. This helps them get a jump-start on how to manipulate sound files on the computer within Peak and Logic, with an overview of the M7CL console they will be using when they start designing the following year.

TEC 151
TECHNICAL DRAWING I
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. Mechanical drawing techniques and projection theories are practiced, including drawing-board geometry, scale and dimensioning, and orthographic principles.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
TEC 152
TECHNICAL DRAWING I
Undergraduate
Second course in a 3 course sequence. Mechanical drawing techniques and projection theories are practiced, including drawing-board geometry, scale and dimensioning, and orthographic principles.

TEC 151 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 153
TECHNICAL DRAWING I
Undergraduate
Third course in a 3 course sequence. Mechanical drawing techniques and projection theories are practiced, including drawing-board geometry, scale and dimensioning, and orthographic principles.

TEC 152 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 154
INTRODUCTION TO VECTOR WORKS
Undergraduate
Students will learn to use the Vector Works drafting program to create construction drawings and Light Plots. Classes will include an instructional lecture/demo and instructed work time. This course is a requirement for Lighting Design Majors.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 208
SOUND TECHNOLOGY I
Undergraduate
This class introduces students to the fundamentals of sound technology. Students will become familiar with a range of audio components and specifications, and learn how they function, how they connect to each other, and why they are used in a modern theatre. Students will be able to put together a sound system and understand how audio signals flow thru that sound system.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 209
SOUND TECHNOLOGY I
Undergraduate
This class teaches the history of the recording industry by learning about the most popular studios that shaped the sound of recorded music. You will also learn the practice and set-up of studio recording.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 210
SOUND TECHNOLOGY I
Undergraduate
Every day of this class presents you with a sound system that is not producing sound. And each day there is a lesson to learn about how to approach and troubleshoot problems that often arise when designing sound for theatre.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 251
TECHNICAL DRAWING II
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. Advanced techniques and theory are practiced, building on the skills covered in Technical Drawing I.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
TEC 252
TECHNICAL DRAWING II
Undergraduate
Second course in a 3 course sequence. Advanced techniques and theory are practiced, building on the skills covered in Technical Drawing I.

TEC 253
TECHNICAL DRAWING II
Undergraduate
Third course in a 3 course sequence. Advanced techniques and theory are practiced, building on the skills covered in Technical Drawing I.

TEC 254
COSTUME TECHNOLOGY I
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. Students are introduced to draping and drafting of patterns for basic garments, various problems of layout and cutting, and specialized sewing techniques for costumes.

TEC 255
COSTUME TECHNOLOGY I
Undergraduate
Second course in a 3 course sequence. Students are introduced to draping and drafting of patterns for basic garments, various problems of layout and cutting, and specialized sewing techniques for costumes.

TEC 256
COSTUME TECHNOLOGY I
Undergraduate
Third course in a 3 course sequence. Students are introduced to draping and drafting of patterns for basic garments, various problems of layout and cutting, and specialized sewing techniques for costumes.

TEC 257
CONSTRUCTION AND RIGGING I
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. Lecture and demonstration in building, rigging, and handling of stage scenery. Special attention is given to the proper use of tools, materials, and stage hardware.

TEC 258
CONSTRUCTION AND RIGGING I
Undergraduate
Second course in a 3 course sequence. Lecture and demonstration in building, rigging, and handling of stage scenery. Special attention is given to the proper use of tools, materials, and stage hardware.

TEC 251 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 252 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 257 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
TEC 259
CONSTRUCTION AND RIGGING I
Undergraduate
Third course in a 3 course sequence. Lecture and demonstration in building, rigging, and handling of stage scenery. Special attention is given to the proper use of tools, materials, and stage hardware.

TEC 258 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 267
STAGE MANAGEMENT I
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. This course will be divided into pre-production, rehearsal period, tech/running, and maintenance of production segments. The objective is to thoroughly introduce the student to the different venues of theatre from small storefront theatre to large regional theatres. Although the emphasis will be on management practices for theatre in all venues, there will be an element of the practical, day-to-day "nuts and bolts" in the stage management process.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 268

TEC 310
COSTUME MANAGEMENT
Undergraduate
Within the theatre there are three costume areas that can be approached from a managerial point of view: shop management, costume storage management, and wardrobe management. Each area can be independent of each other or responsibilities can overlap in a given theatre. This course will cover the responsibilities and challenges of each area from a managerial perspective.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 320
TECHNICAL COLLABORATION
Undergraduate
This class is designed to teach students how to collaborate, and hone their tech cueing skills, within a small storefront theatrical setting that they will undoubtedly come across when they graduate and move into the Chicago theatre community. In this class, the students will learn how to create opening and closing cues; transitions that punctuate, build/decline, propel, and show passage of time. The cues will then be amended in the workshop, to help the students learn to work quickly in changing timings and mood. Making quick artistic decisions and implementing them efficiently is the goal.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 354
COSTUME TECHNOLOGY II
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. The first quarter examines the various methods of generating period patterns using primary and secondary sources. The second quarter introduces corset-making and moves toward draping, drafting, cutting, sewing, fitting, altering, and finishing a dress based on a period pattern. The third quarter examines period garments from the 19th and early 20th Centuries, focusing on making detailed observations and drawings of the construction of these garments. Emphasis is placed on developing the students' knowledge concerning pattern shapes, inner structure of garments, sewing techniques, textiles used, and proportional relationships.

TEC 256 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

INTERNSHIP
Undergraduate
The internship provides the student with an opportunity to learn by working with experienced professionals in an area related to his or her area of study at The Theatre School.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 100
WORLD OF THE THEATRE
Undergraduate
Through the aesthetic analysis of plays and dramatists that were foundational in the development of dramatic literature, the student is encouraged to develop basic critical standards for the understanding and appreciation of dramatic production. Can be taken by non-Theatre School students.

THE 105
HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE
Undergraduate
Second course in a 3 course sequence.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 106
HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE: CLASSICAL GREECE AND ROME
Undergraduate
Third course in a 3 course sequence.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 141
DESIGN WORKSHOP
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. This course will introduce the student to the art of theatre design through the examination of the principles of design and composition, the elements of theatrical design, and the nature of collaboration and communication. It is intended for those who plan to work in the theatre in areas other than design. The focus is on the aesthetic, rather than the technical, aspects of design and on how design fits into the framework of the study of theatre in general. The class is intended to prepare those pursuing a career in theatre for communicating and working with designers. Assignments will emphasize the development of creative skills and a common vocabulary in order to establish a framework for informed choices, and for an appreciation of theatre design and its various areas of specialization. In this first course we will explore the fundamentals of visual design. Students will do several basic design projects during the quarter. The process of theatrical design will be introduced by working with a classic script for design analysis and preliminary design parameters.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
THE 142
DESIGN WORKSHOP
Undergraduate

Second course in a 3 course sequence. In the second quarter the class will focus on applying the fundamentals of the first course to the specific task of theatre design. The emphasis is on scenic design, but costumes, lighting, and sound will also be featured. The script analyzed in the first course will continue to be used to explore the integration of design parameters with the aesthetic and conceptual goals of production. We will also discuss the design process and some of the techniques utilized by designers. Later in the quarter another classic script will be used as the foundation for a final design project culminating in a scenic design for that script.

THE 141 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 143
DESIGN WORKSHOP
Undergraduate

Third course in a 3 course sequence. In the third quarter the emphasis is on group artitic work. In this ‘practicum’ quarter students will collaborate in small groups on a design for a mythological story. Following that, and for the bulk of the quarter, students will be assigned to design teams consisting of director and designers. These teams will follow the entire design process, using a Shakespeare script, culminating in the formal presentation of a fully designed production. It is important to understand that the focus of this course is on design process and communication. The technical aspects of theatre design are kept to a minimum. The course aims to help theatre artists in their collaboration with theatre designers.

THE 142 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 200
THEATRE & THE ART OF PRODUCTION: GENDER & SEXUALITY IN THE THEATRE
Undergraduate

Through lecture, discussion, projects and actual theatre attendance, students explore the human nature of the theatrical impulse and its evolution into theatrical form. Plays and readings deal with issues of gender identity, sexual orientation, and sexuality in performance. Students follow the process of specific drama productions from script to stage and examine the artistic process and the role that sexuality and gender play in performance and rehearsal.

THE 201
THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: INTRODUCTION TO MANAGEMENT CONCEPTS IN THE PERFORMING ARTS
Undergraduate

Through lecture, discussion, readings, videos, research and projects, the student learns about styles of arts leadership, contemporary issues and best practices in the field of non-profit arts management, the history of non-profit arts administration in the US including leaders in the field and opportunities for careers in the arts. Emphasis is placed on how non-profit organizations balance their commitment to the Art, the Artist and the Audience. Specific areas of non-profit arts management to be addressed include the role of the arts manager; the primacy of the mission; planning, change and adaptation; leadership and group dynamics; and human resources. (Cross Listed with PAM 301)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 202
THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: ORGANIZATIONAL STRUCTURE AND FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT
Undergraduate

Through lecture, discussion and projects, the student learns about non-profit arts organizational structures, short-and long-term planning, intersection of mission/vision/values and programming with growth and sustainability, producing vs. presenting organizations, financial management, management information systems and budgeting. (Cross-listed with PAM 302)

THE 201 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student or permission of instructor is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 203
THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: MARKETING FOR THE ARTS
Undergraduate

Through lecture, discussion and projects, the student learns about strategies and objectives in marketing and promoting the performing arts. Specific focus is given to integrated marketing and communication strategies; market research and evaluation techniques; organizational image and branding; patron support services; and audience development. Students will create marketing and public relations plans and materials, both independently and on teams, which incorporate targeting audiences; promotions, publicity, and advertising; and working with various forms of media, including social networking and technology-based platforms. (Cross-listed with PAM 303)

THE 202 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student or permission of instructor is a prerequisite for this class.
THE 204
HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE
Undergraduate
First course in a 3 course sequence. A study of the development of playscripts, the physical theatre, and means of production from ancient Greek and Roman societies through contemporary theatre. The course emphasizes theatre's changing role in society.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 205
HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE
Undergraduate
Second course in a 3 course sequence. A study of the development of playscripts, the physical theatre, and means of production from ancient Greek and Roman societies through contemporary theatre. The course emphasizes theatre's changing role in society.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 206
HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE
Undergraduate
Third course in a 3 course sequence. A study of the development of playscripts, the physical theatre, and means of production from ancient Greek and Roman societies through contemporary theatre. The course emphasizes theatre's changing role in society.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 207
THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: INSTITUTIONAL ADVANCEMENT AND COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT
Undergraduate
Through lecture, discussion and special projects, the student learns about institutional advancement and development as well as collaborations with internal and external constituencies. Topics include forming partnerships, community outreach, board development and engagement, fundraising and grant writing, donor cultivation, and the philanthropic community. This course is the final course in the four-course sequence on Performing Arts Management, and integrates the topics, vocabulary, themes, and subjects introduced in the previous three courses. (Cross-listed with PAM 304)

THE 203 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student or permission of instructor is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 208
UNDERAGE ONSTAGE
Undergraduate
This class examines theatrical literature from the Ancient Greeks through today to uncover how and why playwrights include children in their works and what effect this has on audiences. Contributing variables examined while studying these plays include the time period in which they were written, the social, political, and cultural context, the playwright's style, and the genre. The class will also explore the choice faced by a number of directors: whether to use children true to the age in the script, or adults who can still play young people. The vocabulary of Dramatic Text Analysis will be taught and used when providing written and oral examination of plays covered.

THE 209
SKETCH COMEDY
Undergraduate
Live performances of sketch comedy present theatre in one of its most elemental forms. With a focus on actors and text rather than technical elements, stagings of sketch revues explore the relationship between audience and artist in a dynamic and revealing way. This course will explore both the theoretical underpinnings of comedy and the practical techniques for the creation of this work. The class will examine as literature this work that is often overlooked by critics and theorists because of its perception as a "low" art form.

THE 210
SCRIPT ANALYSIS
Undergraduate
A study of classical text analysis. Using dramatic literature from naturalism to the avant garde, students will dissect how the plays work structurally.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
THE 212
INTRODUCTION TO THEATRE STUDIES
Undergraduate
This course is a general introduction to the aesthetics of the various forms and permutations of theatrical performance. It is a study of performance as an art, with particular emphasis upon its cultural and social influences in our society, and its relationship with the other arts and humanities. The course will emphasize the development of skills for articulate verbal and written response to performances.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 213
SCI-FI AND OTHER GENRE FICTION IN THEATRE
Undergraduate
Science Fiction, Horror, Fantasy, and Superhero as genres of fiction are prevalent in popular culture and successful (almost saturated) in Film, Television, Prose Literature, Graphic Novels, and other forms of storytelling media. Why, then, are they underrepresented in the world of the theatre? And why are the few more well-known examples of these genres in theatre so often unsuccessful, commercially and critically? How can these genres translate to the stage successfully? Which technical characteristics of the theatre and of the theatrical language of storytelling are advantages and disadvantages for bringing these genres to life, as opposed to the other media in which they are more prevalent and successful? This course will attempt to answer these questions by examining extant theatrical works of genre fiction and their financial successes and critical receptions. We will also examine critically-acclaimed pieces of genre fiction in other media to determine why those pieces were successful and how to translate that success to the stage.

THE 214
ETHICAL DECISION MAKING IN THE THEATRE
Undergraduate
Ethical decisions are a challenging part of every profession. Ethical Decision-Making in the Theatre assumes two basic questions: What is an ethical decision, and why is ethics of particular resonance for theatre professionals? Through readings, writing assignments, and class discussions, this course will work to define ethics by examining examples of both ethical and unethical behavior, will examine the ethical role that theatre plays in our society, and will debate the responsibilities that we carry into the profession as theatre artists and professionals. Through group work we will determine a framework for ethical thinking and will apply this framework to specific situations facing the theatre profession today, ultimately determining whether or not the result is an ethical decision.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 215
PLAYS ABOUT SPORTS
Undergraduate
There is a curious relationship between sports and theatre; that is to say, the inherent theatricality of sports and the inherent athleticism of theatre. A significant component in this relationship is the concept of performance and what that entails. We speak of high-performance cars and trucks, we applaud and then discuss, blog, and tweet (sometimes to an extraordinary degree) the performances of both athletes and actors, we talk about academic performance, we see performing seals, dolphins, and whales at Shedd Aquarium, a member of the clergy performs a wedding ceremony, and the list continues. A highly contested term, performance is bound to the team role as it relates to sports, theatre, and everyday life. What is your role on the team? What role were you cast in? What is your role in the company? The team role is aligned with function and also with the context in which the "role is played." More than anything perhaps, both sports and theatre deal with highly charged relationships. In the plays that we will examine in the course, it is the sport itself that serves as both the context of and trigger for the relationships that are created, strengthened, weakened, or in the worst-case scenarios, totally shattered.

THE 216
SCREEN TO STAGE
Undergraduate
There is a long and storied tradition of adapting plays to film. Glengarry Glen Ross, Chicago, A Few Good Men, Harvey, Romeo + Juliet - the list goes on and on. More recently, however, there has been a continuing trend in the opposite direction: major works of theatre, particularly Broadway musicals, are adaptations of films. This course will examine this trend from several angles. We will discuss some of the reasons for this trend, we will discuss the challenges inherent in translating work written for film to the techniques of the stage, and we will compare and contrast artistic, critical, and financial successes and failures of plays adapted from films.
THE 217
THE ART OF STORYTELLING
Undergraduate
Storytelling is one of our oldest art forms. By exploring stories in performance and writing, students acquire the tools necessary to sculpt and perform their own stories. Then, students discover how storytelling can be used in multiple applications - from marketing to change management to human resources to diversity training. Through discussion, projects, and viewing live and recorded performance, students understand the art and building blocks of good storytelling. Studying different forms will illuminate the connection between content and form. Stories have the power to change people and this class explores how and why.

THE 224
DRAMATIC THEORY: TRAGEDY
Undergraduate
An introduction to the major developments in dramatic theory from Aristotle to the present. Through reading essays on theory along with plays, the course will create a context for understanding how the ethical, aesthetic and social philosophies of dramatic theory inform theatrical production and literature. May be taken by non-Theatre majors.

THE 206 is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 225
DRAMATIC THEORY: COMEDY
Undergraduate
An introduction to the major developments in dramatic theory from Aristotle to the present. Through reading essays on theory along with plays, the course will create a context for understanding how the ethical, aesthetic and social philosophies of dramatic theory inform theatrical production and literature. May be taken by non-Theatre majors.

THE 206 is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 227
PLAYWRITING I
Undergraduate
First Course in a three course sequence. A practical course introducing students to the fundamentals of dramatic writing. Students engage in a variety of writing exercises exploring various elements of writing for the stage. Each quarter students will complete short works for the stage that include 10 minute plays, one acts or first acts of longer works.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 228
PLAYWRITING I
Undergraduate
Second in a three course sequence. A practical course introducing students to the fundamentals of dramatic writing. Students engage in a variety of writing exercises exploring various elements of writing for the stage. Each quarter students will complete short works for the stage that include 10 minute plays, one acts or first acts of longer works.

THE 227 and Status as an Undergraduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 229
PLAYWRITING I
Undergraduate
Third in a three course sequence. A practical course introducing students to the fundamentals of dramatic writing. Students engage in a variety of writing exercises exploring various elements of writing for the stage. Each quarter students will complete short works for the stage that include 10 minute plays, one acts or first acts of longer works.

THE 228 and Status as an Undergraduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
THE 232
PLAYWRIGHT’S SEMINAR I
Undergraduate
In this course students explore the underlying formal principles found in various works of architecture, music, visual art, literature, and theatre. Each week students apply these principles to the writing and presentation of short theatrical works. The goal of this course is to expose students to a wide array of approaches to dramatic form.
Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 234
DRAMATURGY I: INTRODUCTION TO DRAMATURGY
Undergraduate
The first course in the three-term Dramaturgy I sequence. Through reading about the history of dramaturgy, the course develops the intellectual framework necessary to think about the art and science of the discipline and focuses on the study of dramaturgical issues of the past two decades. Students work on theoretical projects. Some attendance at theatre productions may be required.
Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 235
DRAMATURGY I: INTRODUCTION TO PRODUCTION DRAMATURGY
Undergraduate
The second class in the three-term Dramaturgy I sequence, this course continues the work of THE 234 and emphasizes writing in a workshop context as well as the process of collaboration and hands-on collaboration itself. Much of the student work focuses on in-house theoretical theatre productions. Students who are dramaturgy-criticism majors prepare to work on their first dramaturgy project, the MFAI short plays.
Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 236
DRAMATURGY I: TYA AND PLAYWORKS DRAMATURGY
Undergraduate
The third class in the three-term Dramaturgy I sequence, this course focuses on the dramaturgy for theatrical productions aimed at young audiences. A major emphasis in the class is the preparation of the actor packets and study guides for The Theatre School's Playworks series.
Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 241
ARE WE STILL FABULOUS?: QUEER IDENTITY IN CONTEMPORARY DRAMA
Undergraduate
Born out of ACT UP and the AIDS militant movement of the late 1980s and early 1990s, Queer Nation concerned itself with the issue of gay and lesbian enfranchisement and power. They created the battle cry, "We're here, we're queer, we're fabulous, get used to it," thereby granting the gay community ownership of the word “fabulous.” Fabulousness not only became a new manifesto for queer politics and camp, but also became synonymous with irony, tragic history, defiance, gender-fuck, glitter, and drama. Currently, young playwrights have shifted the visor of gay drama from overtly political dramas to stories of identity and love. In replacing direct political messages with more personal appeals for social progress, is contemporary gay drama still fabulous? By interpreting and analyzing the most current queer plays, reading critical and reflective essays, and through discussion, students in the course will decide for themselves if “fabulous” is a thing of the past or stronger than ever in the present.

THE 242
STAGE DIRECTION FOR NON-MAJORS
Undergraduate
This course is designed to introduce students to the director's craft. The focus is on the director's relationship to text through the analysis of playscripts and the use of that analysis to plan an interpretation of a play. Analysis will come from a variety of perspectives—personal, psychological, social, and historical. In addition to preparing and presenting their projects, students will attend performances and write papers in response. The class combines lecture, discussion, group exercises, and in-class activities.
THE 244
DRAMATIC WRITING FOR NON-MAJORS
Undergraduate
This course is designed as an introduction to the process of playwriting. The emphasis is on the exploration of a range of techniques and tools available to the playwright. Through the completion and discussion of a series of writing exercises, the class will examine the various elements of playwriting. Particular attention will be paid to the connections between form and meaning. Work for the course will include weekly exercises, written responses to plays in production, and the presentation of projects. Instructional methods will include lecture, discussion, group exercises, and in-class activities. The final project of the class will be the completion of a draft of a 10-minute play.

THE 246
STAGE DESIGN FOR NON-MAJORS
Undergraduate
The course introduces the essential principles of designing for the stage. The art of stage design is explored through the analysis and interpretation of dramatic literature. Students will engage in script analysis, creative research, critical writing, model building and rendering to present visual and written work that represents their personal reflection on the plays examined in the class.

THE 250
AMERICAN FUNNY: STAGE COMEDY FROM GROUCHO MARX TO TINA FEY
Undergraduate
We’re a funny people. We like to watch people be funny. AMERICAN FUNNY is a survey course that looks at American comedy in theatre from the early 20th century to the present day. We view performances of plays on video, read and write about American plays and playwrights, and discuss what is special about going to the theatre. We explore a historical progression of comedy, different types of comedy, the development of the American Comic Hero, and how comedy brings us together as theatregoers and as Americans.

THE 251
STAGE TO SCREEN: CINEMATIC TRANSLATIONS OF THE DRAMATIC CANON
Undergraduate
It is almost always the case that audiences are introduced to the dramatic canon with cinematic translations of the great plays, rather than actual productions. In this course we will examine what elements theatre and film share as well as what elements one or the other medium possesses exclusively if any. What is lost or, indeed gained in cinematic translation? What is the notion of theatricality? What cannot be translated to the film? What societal elements come into play when translating a play for the screen? Socio-political and historical milieu of the original plays will be examined as well as those of the screen plays.

THE 253
THEME PARK THEATRE
Undergraduate
Theme parks have become contemporary equivalents of the ancient Greek theatre festivals - places where the citizenry gather to revisit the myths and history of the community. While much has been written about theme parks from the perspective of cultural studies, urban planning, and commerce, little attention has been paid to their function as performance or theatre. In this class we will attempt to develop criteria for evaluating theme park attractions as works of art. How do theme parks fulfill or challenge traditional definitions of theatre? What is the relationship between audience and performer? Can/should theme parks aspire to do more than entertain? How are stories told physically and architecturally? How have theme parks influenced theatre and other art forms?

THE 254
POLITICAL THEATRE
Undergraduate
This course surveys political theatre from the ancient Greeks right up until today. Through an examination of the political contents of specific plays and of theoretical reading, such as manifestos, the course instructs students in critical thinking, the relationship between form and content, and between a society and one genre of art.

THE 255
ANGELS, PUNKS AND RAGING QUEENS: THE ECLECTIC QUILT OF AIDS DRAMA
Undergraduate
Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) has left an indelible mark on both the history and culture of the world. While fear and loss can paralyze, they can also mobilize. In addition to destroying generations of artists, AIDS has become what some call “the great unifier,” giving voice to a new generation of theatre artists. But what are these voices? Cries for social change? Political rants? Stories of remembrance? Lessons to educate? All of the above? What does AIDS mean when it appears onstage in a performance? By interpreting and analyzing plays from both national and global AIDS perspectives, reading critical and reflective essays, and through discussion, students in the course will discover how the ritual of theatre has been used to create the eclectic quilt of voices that is AIDS drama.
THE 256
THEATRE FOR YOUNG AUDIENCES DRAMATIC LITERATURE: PLAYS FOR THE ONCE AND FUTURE AMERICAN AUDIENCE
Undergraduate
Over the past one hundred years or so, artists and educators in the United States have specifically dedicated themselves to sharing and creating aesthetic, creative experiences for young people. But what have been the impulses behind these plays and creations? Why specifically devise a theatre for young audiences (TYA)? Are children just little adult theatre goers or has an approach and methodology developed through the years to speak directly to young people? The goal of this introductory course is find some answers to these questions by surveying the history of dramatic literature for children in the United States from the beginning of the last century to the present day. Through readings, lectures, workshops, and discussions students will gain insight into the TYA theories, philosophies, styles, and practices that have accumulated over the years. By excavating the past and examining the present, students will achieve further appreciation and understanding of the spectrum of theatrical experiences written and improvised for children.

THE 257
WRITING LOCALLY, THINKING GLOBALLY: INTERNATIONAL THEATRE FOR YOUNG AUDIENCES DRAMATIC LITERATURE
Undergraduate
While writing and performing for their local communities, various international artists have made a global impact on the field of theatre for young audiences. This course is an investigation of the principles, procedures, and practices of theatre for young audiences playwrights and artists worldwide. Through analysis of readings, lectures, workshops, and discussions students will explore the skills and aesthetic techniques that theatre creators from around the globe use to communicate with their audiences. By examining historical, theoretical, and artistic intercontinental connections, students will hopefully gain further appreciation and understanding of the contemporary, global theatre for young audiences (TYA) field.

THE 258
SHADOWS OF UNDERSTANDING: THE HOLOCAUST IN THEATRE AND PERFORMANCE
Undergraduate
The Holocaust of the 20th Century perpetrated and executed by Nazi Germany, has both seared itself into people's consciousness and become very much a part of world culture. Theatre and performance have been created to try to understand this event and search for meaning. Created through multiple perspectives and styles - historical and political, philosophical and religious, realistic and surrealistc, using dark humor and the power of memory, focusing on gender relations -- there is no one method of presenting the Holocaust artistically. Through a close investigation of key theatre and performances, students will discover many works that were unknown to them and that will help to shed some light on these representations more deeply, reflecting the complexity of the Holocaust in a search for understanding and ultimately seeking to answer this imperative, "Can and should art be made from representations of genocidal atrocity?"

THE 259
PERFORMING MOSAIC: JEWISH CULTURE'S INFLUENCE ON AMERICAN THEATRE AND PERFORMANCE
Undergraduate
Over the years the abundance of artistic contributions from Jewish creators--playwrights, performers, composers and lyricists, acting teachers and producers-- has helped to shape the American Theatre as we know it. Through a critical reading of the plays in their context and viewing performances on video this course will explore the unique synthesis and the long and colorful relationship between Jews and theatre in America. Critical questions to be asked are: How does the ethnic mosaic of America and American values and multi-culturalism act as an incubator? How did anti-Semitism and stereotypes play a role? Does the cultural memory of the Jew as the "outsider and survivor in history" provide a particular aesthetic?

THE 260
CHICKS, MEAN GIRLS AND FEMMES FATALES: WOMEN WRITING IN THE AMERICAN THEATRE
Undergraduate
This course examines ninety years of women's dramatic writing in America from the jazz age to today. We will look at plays written by women, and theoretical essays about the plays and playwrights; biographies, as well as historical materials illuminating plays; themes and forms. Identity has always been important to American dramaturgy and women have always occupied a unique place in the theatre: as actresses, as spectators, as icons, as demons, and finally as creators. Women have been playwrights but they have also been producers and theatre adventurers.

THE 261
OCULAR PROOF: SHAKESPEARE'S INFLUENCE IN CINEMA
Undergraduate
Shakespeare's plays explore the scope and depth of the human experience. Using the visual elements of cinema, these epic stories translate effectively for modern audiences. Students will read four plays by Shakespeare, and explore their thematic and dramatic interpretations on film: two adapted from Shakespeare's themes and two cinematic versions of the plays themselves which will elucidate the 'ocular proof' of Shakespeare's influence on cinema.
THE 268
INTRODUCTION TO THE PRODUCTION PROCESS
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to the specifics of the production process and focuses on similarities and differences between the curricular perspective of the production process at The Theatre School and that of the professional world. Through readings, lecture, and discussion, students will gain an orientation to the responsibilities and expectations of first-year crew assignments, basic skills involved in stage management, examples of the production process from both the Chicago and national theatre scenes, and the concept of collaboration as a fundamental component of all production work.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 269
STAGE MANAGEMENT WORKSHOP

THE 408
CAPSTONE: PREPARING FOR THE PROFESSION
Undergraduate
Preparing for the Profession is the first course in the 2-term Capstone sequence. This course serves as a cumulative and summative examination of both the academic and practical components of a 4-year BFA program in theatre studies. Through readings, writing, and discussion, the course will emphasize a number of theoretical issues such as the question of ethical decision-making in theatre practice and the interrelationship between liberal studies coursework (what we make theatre about) and theatre coursework (how we make theatre). From a more practical perspective, this course will also provide students with an introduction to portfolio preparation and cover letters and resumes for prospective jobs as students prepare to enter the professional market.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.
Graduating students will explore the practical and philosophical issues of contemporary theatre. Topics will range from the preparation of resumes and portfolios for various positions to explorations of the role of the arts in society. Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

Portfolio Preparation expands and heightens the work begun in THE 408, Preparing for the Profession, and THE 410, Capstone. Students during the spring quarter course will work to develop a variety of cover letters for prospective jobs, refine and finesse their resumes, review interviewing techniques, and participate in a series of mock interviews for specific theatre companies - all in preparation for Theatre Studies participation in Graduate Showcase. Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

Seminars will offer intensive study of various areas of theatrical study including history, criticism, performance and production. The courses may be organized around specific topics, issues, artists or themes. Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

First course in a 3 course sequence. Advanced playwrights work on independent projects one on one with faculty. Students have the opportunity to refine existing work for workshop in Wrights of Spring or production in the Theatre School season. Students will also be exposed to the practical business of being a playwright entering the profession. Status as an Undergraduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

WGS 100
WOMEN’S LIVES: RACE/CLASS/GENDER
Undergraduate
This course will introduce students to Women's & Gender Studies by exploring a range of issues that contemporary women face through experiences stratified by race, class, gender, sexuality, and disability. Topics will include women's identities; body image and the media; women's sexuality; intimate relationships and families; women, violence and criminalization; women's work, wage discrimination, and welfare reform; women's health issues, such as reproductive rights, and medical research. Participants will have opportunities to examine ways that this stratification interacts in varied eras, cultures, and sub-cultures to shape women's lives. Students will engage in an activist focus as they are introduced to the layers of oppression that affect many women's lives, from the personal to the global. As they analyze social, cultural, and political issues through “gendered lenses”, participants may expand a view of their personal lives to include a framework that encourages resilient responses to such oppression.

WGS 200
WOMEN’S STUDIES IN TRANSNATIONAL CONTEXTS
Undergraduate
This course is a transnational approach to Women's & Gender Studies, examining how goods, money, and media images of women cross national in new ways. A further focus is on how this transformation of national boundaries depends not only upon political changes but also upon economic and cultural shifts. This transnational perspective pays attention to the inequalities and differences intersecting race, class, and gender that arise from new forms of globalization as well as from older histories of colonialism and racism. The course is designed to give the student an in-depth look at a world of connections that do not necessarily create similarities in how women variously experience that world. It introduces students to research by and about women that reflects transnationality in all of its possibilities and challenges.

WGS 212
GROWING UP FEMALE IN THE U.S.
Undergraduate
This course examines what it means to grow up female in the contemporary U.S. It explores the ways in which girls develop and are socialized through childhood and adolescence, focusing on how families, schools, peers, and the larger culture influence young women's lives and the ways in which race, ethnicity, class and sexual orientation affect their growth and learning and how their interaction might affect the behaviors and choices of young women as they mature.

WGS 215
GENDER AND EDUCATION
Undergraduate
This course examines gender as a social construct and its meanings within the context of educational institutions, its implications for teaching and learning, and organizational practices that may oppress and/or empower groups or individuals. Emphasis is given to social forces within the larger society that affect education and schooling; sex-stereotyping and gender bias; teacher behaviors; attitudes, practices, and expectations; student motivation and achievement; principles of non-sexist education; gender bias in settings outside of schools; current issues in the media and popular culture; and the ways in which gender bias and sexism interact with other forms of prejudice, inequality, and oppression.
WGS 225
CONSTRUCTING GENDER AND SEXUALITY
Undergraduate
This course will explore through interdisciplinary theory and research how gender and sexuality are socially constructed. It will examine how such constructions have evolved over time and how individuals of diverse identities and cultural backgrounds have been affected by the changes. Discussion will focus on the roles played by powerful societal institutions (e.g., religious, political, and medical) in effectively defining what is considered gender-appropriate behavior and legitimate sexual expression. Finally, the activism of recent social movements to psychological and politically empower individuals who are neither heterosexual nor traditionally masculine or feminine will be explored.

WGS 230
CONTESTED BODIES
Undergraduate
This course will consider the theories and practices of differential embodiments and the experiences of bodies that don't fit the norm: queer bodies, fat bodies, transgender bodies, bodies of color. In Western/Global North cultures, the mind is given more imporance than the body, and historically, oppressed groups have been associated more with bodies than minds. The course will aid in understanding and questioning the dominant norms that promote "normal" bodies and normative embodiment and offer alternative theories and practices of embodiment. Students interested in the performing arts, social and health sciences, fat studies and disability studies, as well as women's and gender studies students will find valuable frameworks in this class.

WGS 249
GENDER AND POLITICS IN IRELAND
Undergraduate
This course explores the relationship between gender and politics in Ireland, focusing on the political history of gender relations in Ireland, women's political involvement throughout the enormous changes of the 20th Century, and contemporary legal and public policy issues related to sex/gender. The attitudes and behaviors of women as voters, activists, officeholders and peace activists will be examined, as will Ireland's place in global gender issues. We will pay particular attention to the changes that have taken place since Ireland's entry into the EU, the "Celtic Tiger" transformations of the Irish economy, and the impact of the recent worldwide economic recession on gender and politics in Ireland, along with the efforts of women, North and South, to further the process of peace in the North, which has been wracked by violence for several decades. Cross-listed with IRE 249.

WGS 250
FEMINIST FRAMEWORKS
Undergraduate
This course introduces feminist theories and methodologies with an emphasis on how theoretical frameworks shape specific research, policies, and praxis. The course will provide an introductory exploration of feminist frameworks in relationship to specific issues and questions within women's studies, with some attention to the resulting research/analytic methods. The class will delineate, analyze and compare the underlying assumptions and frameworks of a variety of feminist theories (i.e. historical materialist, liberal, radical, standpoint and identity-based, critical race, postcolonial, and transnational theoretical frameworks) in relation to a set of issues and questions (e.g. violence against women, sex discrimination, reproductive rights). The class will explore the relationship between these frameworks and knowledge production, public policy, and social change efforts within national and transnational contexts. Thus, the students will be able to discern how theories frame research questions and methods, as well as how they frame policy issues and action proposals; and students will be able to analyze the theoretical frameworks comparatively.

WGS 255
DECONSTRUCTING THE DIVA
Undergraduate
This course studies the figure of the diva as a powerful cultural text, central to both understanding historical conceptions of socially normative femininity and to uncovering and examining our own present-day conceptions of what it means to be feminine, to be a woman. Through fiction, drama, biography, autobiography, film, audio recordings, and gender, the course explores representations of the diva in literature, art, and popular and high culture. The goal of this course is to investigate the ways that "diva" has actually been code for women (and sometimes men) behaving outside of societal norms. Students will do this both historically and thematically, uncovering a path in which "women behaving badly" are routinely censured, and silenced. Students will also investigate how women both resist and re-appropriate this label. This course also seeks to explore the lives of both extraordinary and ordinary women, contextualizing the historical moments that they both contested and were sometimes consumed by.

WGS 260
GENDER, SEXUALITY AND VIOLENCE
Undergraduate
This course explores the social, political, and cultural contexts of interpersonal violence with a focus on sexual violence and dating violence among and against adolescents and young adults. This course also will emphasize activist strategies and anti-violence movements.
WGS 270
WOMEN IN CARIBBEAN SOCIETIES
Undergraduate
This is a survey course which focuses on the diverse social, cultural and political realities of women in the Caribbean region across and within historical periods marked by colonialism, slavery and indentureship; anti-colonial, nationalist and labor movements; economic globalization and the emergence of the postcolony. Drawing on primary documents, images, feminist postcolonial writings, the course investigates how women of indigenous, African, Chinese, Indian and multiracial (or "mixed") descent have been positioned within various societies, and in relationship to each other. Topics covered include visual representations of women, gender and sexuality; forms of resistance and political engagement; motherhood, reproduction and the State; women in various religious traditions; work and economic status; social class, color and femininities; popular culture.

WGS 275
BLACK FEMINIST THEORIES IN A U.S. CONTEXT
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to the major figures, statements, and movements that shape Black feminist thinking, writing and activism in the United States. Issues examined may include social and economic equity, beauty and voice, activism and social change; and the exploration of identity and subjectivity through the lens of intersectionality, including race, gender, sexual orientation, class, citizenship, and immigrant status. Throughout we will consider Black feminist thought's situatedness in larger frameworks of Western feminist thought and its linkages with international feminist discourses.

SPECIAL TOPICS

See course schedule for current offerings.

WGS 300
FEMINIST THEORIES
Undergraduate
Disagreements about what counts as feminist theory have raged as the borders of feminist discourse have shifted over the past two and a half decades. Yet most feminists continue to insist that sex/gender be considered basic categories of analysis and theory. Broadly conceived, feminist theory--historical or contemporary--represents an attempt to understand and interpret the roots and causes of women's place in the world. This course examines how different theoretical perspectives address gender, class, racial, and sexual inequalities and the method(s) proposed for social change. Students will be required to critically engage these theories in terms of how they address the commonalities and differences among women, especially insofar as these are grounded in race, class, and sexual identifications and dissonances. This course is a core requirement for the Women's & Gender Studies major.

WGS 250 is a prerequisite for this course.

WGS 303
GENDER, VIOLENCE AND RESISTANCE
Undergraduate
This course explores the social and cultural contexts of interpersonal violence in women's lives, with a focus on domestic violence, rape, harassment. The course seeks to understand how gender, race, class, sexuality, and national differences and inequalities shape the experiences of violence, the social and institutional responses to violence, and strategies for resistance and change.

WGS 306
GENDER AND FAMILIES
Undergraduate
Gender and Families is an upper-level undergraduate course that considers issues raised by the diverse roles that women, men, and children play in families. It focuses particular attention on the social construction of gender in families, and examines families in their social, economic, and political contexts. Topics covered include adult intimate relationships, the social construction of motherhood and fatherhood, and shifting gender relations of power in families, family stress and adaptation, and the impact of social policies on families' lives.

WGS 307
WOMEN IN THE MIDDLE EAST: BEYOND THE VEIL
Undergraduate
This course explores how Middle Eastern Women have been represented in the media outside of the Middle East, by Arab women scholars, and "Third World" feminists and challenges these representations by focusing on issues such as veiling, the everyday lives of Middle Eastern Women, political activism, literary works, economics and social class, and media representations.
WGS 310
FEMINIST ETHICS
Undergraduate
This course explores theoretical issues regarding women's moral experience and feminist approaches to liberation from various forms of socio-cultural and political oppression. It explores the moral status of women from their own experiences and perspectives, in contrast to traditional Western ethics' characterizations, as well as feminist ethical perspectives on oppressive social practices, such as racism and violence against women, and the ethical dimensions of difference among women.

WGS 314
ANTIRACIST FEMINISMS
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to the wide array of feminist thinking regarding ideologies of race, racism, white privilege, ethnocentrism, racial and ethnic identifications, and their relationship to gender, class, sexual and national identities and locations. The ways that racism has divided women's movements and feminist organizations will be examined along with the work of feminist scholars, writers, activists, and advocates who have articulated explicitly anti-racist theories, analyses, and programs within the U.S. as well as internationally.

WGS 316
REPRESENTATIONS OF THE BODY
Undergraduate
This course reflects the current explosion of intellectual interest in the body as a site of cultural meaning. The course addresses the questions of how the body is socially created and sustained. It explores those questions in terms of tensions between nature and culture, body and spirit, and how discourses of power converge in and on the body.

WGS 320
TRANSFORMATIVE JUSTICE: THEORY AND PRACTICE
Undergraduate
This course introduces students to transformative justice responses to violence that do not rely on state institutions. These include collective processes for support and healing, intervention, accountability, and prevention. The pedagogical praxis of learning will be through communal peacemaking circles and collective strategy sessions to create community responses to violence. Cross-listed as WGS 420.

WGS 322
FEMALE IDENTITIES: YOUNG ADULT LITERATURE
Undergraduate
This course is an introduction to Young Adult Literature as a genre and explores how this literature relates to adolescent girls' experiences in diverse cultural contexts. It addresses themes related to physical and emotional development, the development of personal values and beliefs; the construction of identity; beliefs and attitudes about the body; interpersonal relationships; gender and sexuality; and coping with change, death, belonging, alienation, and escape. Course materials are multicultural with a focus upon the experiences of female adolescents in terms of ethnicity, culture, gender, religion, disability, as well as other dimensions of difference within national and international contexts.

WGS 324
WOMEN IN THEATRE: A GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE
Undergraduate
This course examines the concepts of gender and theatrical performance with reference to history, culture, critical response, viewer interpretation, and identity in a global context. Students will study character as a dramatic construct with respect to gender, race, and class; it examines how dramatic images are as diverse as their cultural contexts; explores the concepts of reader and viewer response to theater; and interrogates the relationship between the American theatrical image and the larger global context within which images are created.

WGS 326
WOMEN AND LAW
Undergraduate
This course investigates the variety of ways in which women come into relation with the law, e.g., through laws and judicial decisions dealing with equal opportunity. Cross-listed as PSC 363.
WGS 330
Lesbian Lives
Undergraduate
This course explores constructions of lesbian lives, politics, and communities in the U.S. using the political cartoons of artist Alison Bechdel as a primary text, along with theoretical and historical readings. Students examine the constructions of identities and politics within lesbian culture, paying particular attention to how these have changed and evolved over time, and how community can be created and sustained. Cross-listed with WGS 430.

WGS 332
Creating Change: Contemporary GLBT Politics
Undergraduate
This course explores the historical roots and contemporary realities of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered (GLBT) politics, nationally and internationally. GLBT groups and individuals are gaining political recognition, challenging institutions, and creating change by asserting claims to rights and protections under law. Such issues as hate crimes, marriage, AIDS, and ballot initiatives over non-discrimination law and policy have entered the political mainstream since the 1970’s. This course examines the GLBT movement, its political and social strategies, conflicts and issues, and the political roles played by its members as participants in political culture. Cross-listed as PSC 312 and LGQ 332.

WGS 334
Growing Up Female in a Global Context
Undergraduate
This course will address issues related to growing up female and coming of age in the 21st century within a global context. We will focus on the following questions, what does it mean to be female, a girl, a young woman in diverse cultural and cultural contexts, examining the ways in which community, family, peers, schools and relationships with others, popular culture and public policy influence their lived experiences, attitudes, beliefs, behaviors, choices and possibilities. The analytical framework will be rooted in understanding how the intersections of race, ethnicity, class, sexual orientation, religion, and belief systems influence notions of the self, the body, and the construction of female identities.

WGS 336
Women and Film
Undergraduate
This course explores one or more ways in which film as art, as cultural product, or as industry has dealt with women, as subjects, artists, consumers or critics of film.

WGS 338
Sexual Justice: Lesbians, Gays and the Law
Undergraduate
This course examines the historical and contemporary relationships between lesbians, gays, and the law in the U.S., focusing on the intersections of power, sexuality, and identity with issues of sexuality-based discrimination. It focuses on case law, along with social science and legal literature, seeking out a diversity of voices and experiences. Primary emphasis will be on cases that have come before the U.S. Supreme Court since the mid-1950’s, with particular attention paid to how groups and individuals have reached out to the court system for redress of injustice and how these groups and individuals have exercised or failed to exercise power within the legal process. Cross-listed with PSC 369, LGQ 338.

WGS 342
Queer Pioneers: Culture, Gender, and Political Activism
Undergraduate
This course examines some of the historical roots and contemporary realities of lesbian and gay politics in the United States through the biographies of pioneering individuals whose lives and work shaped an ongoing struggle for civil rights and social justice. The biographies of individuals who, as activists and artists, rose to challenge the conventions of culture, gender, and political exclusion will be studied in-depth to both illuminate the politics of social movement and suggest how these diverse individuals and experiences may influence past and future efforts for cultural and political change.

WGS 345
Women, War and Resistance
Undergraduate
This course aims to make feminist sense of contemporary wars and conflicts. It analyzes the intersections between gender, race, class, and ethnicity in national conflicts. The class traces the gendered processes of defining citizenship, national identity and security, and examines the role of institutions like the military in the construction of femininity and masculinity. The course focuses on the gendered impact of war and conflict through examining torture, mass rape, genocide, and refugee displacement.
WGS 352
GENDER, COMMUNITY, AND ACTIVISM: COMMUNITY-BASED LEARNING IN WGS
Undergraduate
Gender, Community, and Activism: Community-Based Learning in WGS is an interdisciplinary experiential/service learning seminar designed for undergraduate and graduate students in the field of Women's and Gender Studies. In an effort to provide students with an experience that integrates the feminist-informed theoretical work of the classroom with practical application in the community, the course will pair students with internship opportunities at community-based organizations that focus on a cause/issue related to their particular area of scholarly interest. The course is designed to encourage learning by doing and reflecting, where students will be asked to reflect on their internship experiences outside of the classroom through course readings, written assignments, and class discussion.

WGS 354
CONTEMPORARY KNITTING: GENDER, CRAFT, AND COMMUNITY SERVICE
Undergraduate
This course will explore the gendered history of knitting and its contemporary popularity as both a creative leisure-time activity and a means of providing community service. The social history and social construction of a gendered division of labor surrounding knitting, with its complexities, provide the theoretical foundation of the course. Students will learn the basic techniques of knitting and will be expected to practice their new skills in- and out-side of the classroom. They will reach a level of proficiency sufficient to producing a minimum of three contributions to service knitting projects.

WGS 355
WOMEN AND ART
Undergraduate
This class considers both the history of women artists and representations of women from other cultures around the world, from prehistory to the contemporary era. In addition, it will introduce feminist methodologies that can be applied to specific case studies. Cross-listed with HAA 366, WGS 455 and MLS 474.

100/200-level History of Art and Architecture course or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

WGS 363
GLOBALLY QUEER: TRANSNATIONAL LGBTQ POLITICS
Undergraduate
This course explores how political issues affecting lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer (LGBTQ) communities and individuals are linked to global and transnational politics of citizenship, power, security, and political economy. It focuses on how gender roles, relationships, and identities are constructed, deployed, challenged, and resisted around the world, paying particular attention to how these systems and structures are interconnected. Cross-listed as WGS 463 and LGQ 363.

WGS 375
FEMINIST SMS OF THE BLACK DIASPORA
Undergraduate
This course is designed to offer a critical examination of black women's experiences and thought within a global and transnational framework. The course examines works by and about black women in diverse social, political, and geographical contexts: the continent of Africa, Western Europe, Canada, Latin America, the Caribbean, and Australia. Topics to be explored will include issues of politics and ideology; power and inequality based on intersectionality of race and other dimension of identity; agency, activism, and social movements; the mass media, popular culture and social policies. Cross-listed with WGS 475.

WGS 378
UTOPIAN AND DYSTOPIAN LITERATURE AND FILM: GENDER, RACE AND BEYOND
Undergraduate
What does the future hold for humankind on this planet and elsewhere? What will life be like in the not too distant as well as far distant futures? How will societies be organized? What kinds of cultural milieus will shape life and living? How will identities be articulated and negotiated? Who will govern? Who will be in resistance? Who will be present and who will be absent? How will things come to be? These questions will form the core of our study of a genre devoted to social commentary, envisioning vastly different ideas about the future, emergent from 20th century works.
WGS 386
BLACK WOMEN'S EXPERIENCES: VARIABLE TOPICS
Undergraduate
Topics vary. This course is designed to address issues related to the particular experiences of women in the Black Diaspora. Topics will vary in terms of their particular focus in addressing issues that are important to understanding Black women's experiences in a US context and globally--making interconnections to the experiences of women of other ethnic, cultural, and national backgrounds. The course will provide occasions for students to study and examine issues such as Black women's cultural criticism, Black women in the arts, engagement in activism and social and political movements--literature and the media. Cross-listed with WGS 486 and ABD 386.

WGS 387
TEEN VIOLENCE PREVENTION
Undergraduate
This course is an interdisciplinary experiential/service learning seminar in which students will participate in, and critically reflect upon, a relationship violence prevention program in Chicago area high schools. This class will explore adolescent development, considering the ways in which economic, social, political and cultural contexts influence that development. In addition, we will focus on adolescent relationships, group work with teens, aggression and violence in intimate -- in particular teen -- relationships, and evaluation of programs to prevent teen violence. Each week students will address a set of theoretical and/or practical themes that in some way relate to teen violence and aggression, as well as prevention of such violence. Discussions of each theme will draw on course readings, lecture materials, and perhaps most importantly, students' experiences working with teens in schools.

WGS 388
QUEER THEORY: AN INTRODUCTION
Undergraduate
This course examines some of the central texts of queer theory in order to contextualize and historicize the notion of homosexuality as a primary category of identity. The issue of sexual normativity as it relates to gay and lesbian assimilation will also be discussed. Because of the significant relationship of gender and sexuality, we will also examine theories of embodiment and take up the debates around the politics of intersex and transgender identities. Formerly WMS 284.

WGS 390
WOMEN ACROSS CULTURES
Undergraduate
A critical analysis of the experiences of women around the world in diverse social contexts, examined through different disciplines, with a special emphasis on economics, politics and culture. WGS 400
FEMINIST THEORIES
Graduate
This course is designed to provide you with an introduction to the development of some contemporary feminist theories: local, global, transnational. The theories are interpretive frameworks to analyze, understand and act in the world. The theorists/writers offer concepts to critically analyze structures and practices of oppression, privilege, resilience, and resistance; they provide frameworks for conducting feminist research, advocacy, and activism for personal, social, intellectual, and/or political change and transformation. In this course, we will examine how these theoretical perspectives seek to understand and address various systems of inequality and power and the method(s) that we - theorists, scholars, researchers, advocates, activists, artists, writers - propose for change. We will discuss how these various feminisms continue to develop and evolve in relation to one another and to changing historical, political, social, economic contexts. Cross-listed with MLS 440.

WGS 406

WRD 203
STYLE FOR WRITERS
Undergraduate
This course provides students with opportunities to explore stylistic choices in written prose. Students will examine both published work and their own writing to explore how to manipulate language in specific contexts to achieve specific ends. Writing workshops will help students provide and receive constructive comments aimed at revision of drafts.

WRD 204
TECHNICAL WRITING
Undergraduate
In this course, students learn to communicate and interpret specialized information for readers’ practical use. The course highlights the action-orientated goals of technical writing and the importance of accurately communicating information to users. The course provides an overview of key issues related to technical writing such as usability, audience analysis, designing pages and screens, effective collaboration with peers, interpreting and presenting data, and writing clearly and persuasively. Students learn to write, revise and present common technical writing genres such as instructions, tutorials, manuals, reports, product/process descriptions, proposals, and oral presentations.
HISTORY OF LITERACIES AND WRITING
Undergraduate
Literacy is traditionally defined as the ability to read and write. This course will expand that definition to also explore the technological, cultural, and political aspects of literacy from the earliest archeological record of writing to modern information technology and digital literacy. Students will examine practices and narratives surrounding literacy, learn how both physical media and social power constrain what information gets recorded and how, and question the implications of these constraints on the ways we define and engage literacy and writing.

PROFESSIONAL WRITING
Undergraduate
In this introductory course, students learn fundamentals of professional writing, with a special focus on distinguishing academic writing from workplace writing. The course provides a solid foundation that students can build on as they develop specializations in their professional fields. Through a series of short assignments, students explore the structure and format of typical professional writing documents, examine a variety of workplace writing situations, and begin developing a clear and concise style appropriate for professional settings. Students analyze and write a number of workplace genres, such as memos, emails, letters, resumes, short reports, web documents, and professional presentations.

Admission

Admission to graduate programs is determined by each individual graduate program. Please consult the catalog of the respective college for additional information. For general information or to apply to a graduate program consult the Office of Admission website.
DePaul Campuses

Students of any school or college may register for classes on any campus, arranging hours and courses in a manner designed to afford maximum educational advantage.

The Lincoln Park Campus is situated about three miles north of the Chicago Loop in the vicinity of Webster (2200 N), Halsted (800 W) and Racine (1200 W). The offices for the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences, the College of Science and Health, the School of Music, the College of Education, and The Theatre School are located on this campus.

The Loop Campus is located at 1 East Jackson Boulevard, between State, Jackson and Wabash. The offices for the Driehaus College of Business, the College of Computing and Digital Media, the College of Communication, the College of Law and the School for New Learning are located on this campus.

Suburban Sites

The Kellstadt Graduate School of Business, the College of Science and Health, the College of Education, the College of Communication and the School for New Learning offer some courses at a number of the following suburban sites:

The Naperville Campus is located at 150 W. Warrenville Road, Naperville, Illinois (at I-88 and Naperville Road).

The O'Hare Campus is located in the Triangle Plaza, 8770 W. BrynMawr Ave Suite 100, Chicago, Illinois (at I-90 and Cumberland).

Rosalind Franklin University of Medicine and Science is located 3333 Green Bay Road in North Chicago, Illinois. DePaul students have the option of taking the Master's Entry in Nursing Practice (MENP) on the RFU campus.

Schools and Colleges

Driehaus College of Business

Established in 1912, the Driehaus College of Business is the nation's tenth oldest business school and serves individuals and organizations seeking access to the highest quality business education as a means for achieving intellectual and professional goals. The College also encompasses our highly respected graduate programs in business.

The Kellstadt Graduate School of Business prepares students to be leaders by frequently updating its programs to keep pace with the dynamics of global business.

College of Communication

The College of Communication provides students with a combination of timeless principles and up-to-the-minute tools, whether they're pursuing journalism; public relations and advertising; media studies; radio, television and film; relational, group and organizational communication; or intercultural communication.

College of Computing and Digital Media

The College of Computing and Digital Media (CDM) offers students a collaborative education where technology, artistry and business intersect. CDM is organized into three schools:

The School of Cinematic Arts is home to our animation and cinema programs, which merge creativity, technology, imagination, technique, vision and execution.

The School of Computing houses programs across the technology spectrum, and combines theoretical fundamentals with hands-on practice.

The School of Design – CDM’s newest school – is home to programs in graphic design, interactive and social media, game development, human computer interaction, and digital communication and media arts.

College of Education

The College of Education offers degree programs in bilingual/bicultural education; counseling; curriculum studies; early childhood education; educational leadership; elementary education; middle school mathematics education; reading specialist education; secondary education; social and cultural foundations of education; special education; sport, fitness and recreation leadership; and world language education.

College of Law

The DePaul College of Law was one of the first law schools in the country to introduce educational innovations like the study of negotiation techniques, courses in international criminal law and pre-trial courses in skills techniques. Today, our health law and intellectual property programs are among the best in the country, according to U.S. News & World Report.

College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences

The oldest college at DePaul, the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences (LAS) offers more than 28 undergraduate and 30 graduate degree programs. Courses meet during the day, evenings and on weekends, primarily on the Lincoln Park Campus.

College of Science and Health

The College of Science and Health (CSH) was established in 2011 to help its students meet the demands of the growing fields of science and health. CSH offers multiple undergraduate majors and graduate programs in the areas of biology, chemistry, environmental science, mathematics, nursing, physics and psychology.

School of Music

DePaul’s School of Music was founded in 1912 and is dedicated to excellence in both music teaching and performance. When they’re not working with DePaul students, many of the school’s faculty serve as members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Lyric Opera of Chicago, or the Grant Park Symphony Orchestra, or as some of the city’s most prominent freelance, chamber and jazz musicians.

School for New Learning

Created in 1972 to serve the learning needs of adult students, the School for New Learning (SNL) is one of the first university-wide efforts in the United States catering to older students through a separate college. SNL’s innovative approach to teaching the adult student, which gives students credit toward degrees for life experience, has earned it international acclaim.

The Theatre School

Founded in 1925 as the Goodman School of Drama, The Theatre School at DePaul is the Midwest’s oldest theatre training conservatory. Known for its highly structured program and set in a world-renowned theater city, the school has earned a reputation as a standard of excellence in American professional theatre training.
DePaul University Mission

This mission statement embodies the principal purposes of DePaul University. As such it is the nexus between past, present and future; the criterion against which plans are formulated and major decisions made; the bond which unites faculty, students, staff, alumni, and trustees as an academic community. As a university, DePaul pursues the preservation, enrichment, and transmission of knowledge and culture across a broad scope of academic disciplines. It treasures its deep roots in the wisdom nourished in Catholic universities from medieval times. The principal distinguishing marks of the university are its Catholic, Vincentian, and urban character.

Central Purposes

DePaul, in common with all universities, is dedicated to teaching, research, and public service. However, in pursuing its own distinctive purposes, among these three fundamental responsibilities this university places highest priority on programs of instruction and learning. All curricula emphasize skills and attitudes that educate students to be lifelong, independent learners. DePaul provides sufficient diversity in curricular offerings, personal advisement, student services, and extracurricular activities to serve students who vary in age, ability, experience, and career interests. Full-time and part-time students are accorded equivalent service and are held to the same academic standards.

As a comprehensive university, DePaul offers degree programs at the undergraduate and graduate levels and a range of professional programs. The liberal arts and sciences are recognized not only for their intrinsic value in undergraduate and graduate degree programs, but also because they are foundational for all specialized undergraduate programs and supportive of all advanced professional programs. The university maintains that depth of scholarship to offer the doctorate in selected academic disciplines. Libraries, computer resources, and other academic support services match the levels and diversity of degree programs.

Research is supported both for its intrinsic merit and for the practical benefits it offers to faculty, students, and society. Broadly conceived, research at the university entails not only the discovery and dissemination of new knowledge but also the creation and interpretation of artistic works, application of expertise to enduring societal issues, and development of methodologies that improve inquiry, teaching and professional practice. In meeting its public service responsibility, the university encourages faculty, staff and students to apply specialized expertise in ways that contribute to the societal, economic, cultural and ethical quality of life in the metropolitan area and beyond. When appropriate, DePaul develops service partnerships with other institutions and agencies.

Students and Faculty

DePaul invites to its programs of study students from across the nation. Originally founded for students from the greater Chicago area, and still serving them predominantly, DePaul continues its commitment to the education of first generation college students, especially those from the diverse cultural and ethnic groups in the metropolitan area. Admission standards for all degree programs are selective or highly selective. In admitting students the university places greatest weight on intellectual potential and academic achievement. It seeks diversity in students’ special talents, qualities, interests, and socio-economic background.

DePaul University seeks to manage its resources effectively so as to control the costs it charges students for programs and services. Moreover, it makes available as much financial aid as possible to assure access to a broad range of talented students. The university identifies and offers special assistance to students of high potential who have been handicapped by educational, personal or societal obstacles beyond their control. From its first charter DePaul has supported a philosophy which now is expressed as being an equal opportunity educator and employer. DePaul continues to provide equal opportunities to students and employees without regard to age, national origin, race, sex, handicap, creed or color. Moreover, it strives to recruit faculty and staff who reflect the diverse mix of the student body.

The faculty, learned yet learning, gives substance to the mission of the university. These men and women personify the intrinsic value of scholarly inquiry and the force of creative and intellectual efforts. Through their dedication to learning, their contributions to a personalistic environment, and their faith in the potential of their students, the faculty and staff serve as role models for students.

Distinguishing Marks

By reason of its Catholic character, DePaul strives to bring the light of Catholic faith and the treasures of knowledge into a mutually challenging and supportive relationship. It accepts as its corporate responsibility to remain faithful to the Catholic message drawn from authentic religious sources both traditional and contemporary. In particular, it encourages theological learning and scholarship; in all academic disciplines it endorses critical moral thinking and scholarship founded on moral principles which embody religious values and the highest ideals of our society.

On the personal level, DePaul respects the religiously pluralistic composition of its members and endorses the interplay of diverse value systems beneficial to intellectual inquiry. Academic freedom is guaranteed both as an integral part of the university’s scholarly and religious heritage, and as an essential condition of effective inquiry and instruction.

The university derives its title and fundamental mission from St. Vincent de Paul, the founder of the Congregation of the Mission, a religious community whose members, Vincentians, established and continue to sponsor DePaul. Motivated by the example of St. Vincent, who instilled a love of God by leading his contemporaries in serving urgent human needs, the DePaul community is above all characterized by ennobling the God-given dignity of each person. This religious personalism is manifested by the members of the DePaul community in a sensitivity to and care for the needs of each other and of those served, with a special concern for the deprived members of society. DePaul University emphasizes the development of a full range of human capabilities and appreciation of higher education as a means to engage cultural, social, religious, and ethical values in service to others.

As an urban university, DePaul is deeply involved in the life of a community which is rapidly becoming global, and is interconnected with it. DePaul both draws from the cultural and professional riches of this community and responds to its needs through educational and public service programs, by providing leadership in various professions, the performing arts, and civic endeavors and in assisting the community in finding solutions to its problems.

Adopted
by the Board of Trustees
November, 1991

Vincentian Identity

The university derives its title and fundamental mission from St. Vincent de Paul, the founder of the Congregation of the Mission, a religious community whose members, Vincentians, established and continue to sponsor DePaul. Motivated by the example of St. Vincent, who instilled a love of God by leading his contemporaries in serving urgent human needs, the DePaul community is above all characterized by ennobling the God-given dignity of each person. This religious personalism is manifested by the members of the DePaul community in a sensitivity to and care for the needs of each other and of those served, with a special concern for the deprived members of society. DePaul University emphasizes the development of a full range of human capabilities and appreciation of higher education as a means to engage cultural, social, religious, and ethical values in service to others.

Complaints and Grievances

DePaul University emphasizes the development of a full range of human capabilities and appreciation of higher education as a means to engage cultural, social, religious, and ethical values in service to others.

In support of this mission, DePaul University is committed to treating every member of its community with dignity, justice and respect fostering a positive learning environment and providing quality service. It is important for students to know how to address concerns and issues that may be contrary to this commitment.

Complaints or concerns that a policy or procedure has been incorrectly or unfairly applied can often be resolved through an initial conversation with the staff, faculty member or department where the issue originated and his/her supervisor if necessary.

DePaul has established a number of policies and procedures for responding to particular types of concerns. Contact information for these policies and procedures can be found in the bottom section of this page:

- Concerns about grades are addressed through the University's Grade Challenge policy. Detailed information is available in the Academic Handbook section of the University Catalog.
- Concerns about academic integrity are addressed through the Academic Integrity policy and process. Detailed information is available on the Academic Integrity website.
- Concerns related to student conduct are addressed through the Code of Student Responsibility, and the Student Conduct Process. Detailed information is available in the Academic Handbook section of the University Catalog.
- Concerns about discrimination or harassment on the basis of a variety of protected characteristics are addressed by the Office of Institutional Diversity and Equity through the Anti-Discrimination and Anti-Harassment Policy and Procedures.
- Concerns based on sexual violence, sexual harassment, or other sex discrimination (Title IX) are addressed through the Dean of Students Office, the Office of Institutional Diversity and Equity, or through Public Safety. DePaul's Title IX Coordinator is the Dean of Students. Detailed information is available in the Academic Handbook section of the University Catalog.
- Concerns about confidentiality of education records (FERPA-Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act), are addressed through the Office of Student Records.
- Concerns about academic issues relating to faculty or staff can often be resolved through an initial conversation with the faculty, staff member or student employee involved in the situation. Therefore, students with academic complaints or concerns should address the issue following the steps indicated below:
  1. The issue should first be discussed with the faculty or staff member.
  2. If this does not resolve the issue the student should then discuss the issue with the department chairperson or program director for faculty issues or the individual's supervisor for staff. If you are unsure of the appropriate college contact, please see below for a directory of College and College Dean's Offices.
  3. If the issue is still not resolved, the student should then discuss the matter with the Office of the Dean of the faculty member's college for faculty issues or the department supervisor for staff issues.
  4. If the issue is still not resolved, the student may discuss the issue with the Office of the Provost.

The Dean of Students Office is a central location to which students can turn with problems they have been unable to resolve. The Dean of Students Office hears student concerns and helps students understand their options for resolving the concerns and/or locating appropriate services: http://offices.depaul.edu/student-affairs/about/departments/Pages/dos.aspx.

In addition, the University Ombudsperson is available to provide consultation about conflict resolution, to clarify policies and procedures, and to help find the right person or department to respond to questions. Students may also always choose to report concerns or misconduct through the University's confidential reporting mechanisms: 877.236.8390 or https://compliance.depaul.edu/hotline/index.asp

The U.S. Department of Education requires institutions offering online education to provide contact information for students to file complaints with its accreditor and state agencies. Contact information for DePaul's regional accreditor (the Higher Learning Commission), programmatic/specialized accreditor and state agencies is available in the Handbook section of the University Catalog.

University Learning Goals and Outcomes

Preamble

In common with all universities, DePaul strives to ensure that its students come away from their experience with knowledge and skills that will enable them to fulfill their personal and professional aspirations, interact productively with others in all their diverse perspectives, contribute meaningfully to society, and continue learning throughout their lives. Moreover, DePaul shares with other universities the goal that students will use their knowledge and skills to conduct themselves ethically and humanely, with an appreciation for the past and an eye towards shaping an even better future.

At the same time, DePaul’s mission – Catholic, Vincentian, urban – calls on us to consider these broad goals for learning in a manner that honors the university’s distinctive qualities. DePaul’s Catholic heritage encourages us to study religious traditions, and to critically examine the moral underpinnings of all academic disciplines. The example of St. Vincent, who worked with people from all strata of society in order to address urgent human needs, infuses our understanding of both education and service with a concern for social justice, for the university mission statement reminds us that “the DePaul community is above all characterized by ennobling the God-given dignity of each person.” And as an urban university, DePaul’s deep involvement in multiple communities, within Chicago and beyond, invites us to both draw on the city’s rich opportunities for learning and serve as partners in helping them move forward. In sum, the mission statement tells us, “DePaul University emphasizes the development of a full range of human capabilities and appreciation of higher education as a means to engage cultural, social, religious, and ethical values in service to others.”

With the university’s mission as their foundation, these Learning Goals and Outcomes prepare students to engage in the world of the twenty-first century, carrying with them the heritage and values that distinguish DePaul.

Goal 1. Mastery of Content

This goal embraces the breadth and depth of ideas, theories, approaches, and information which DePaul students encounter through and beyond their studies.

Outcomes: DePaul graduates will demonstrate and be able to apply:

- general knowledge of cultures, religions, science, the arts, history, and computational reasoning.
- specialized knowledge and skills from within a specific discipline or field.

Goal 2. Intellectual and Creative Skills

In order to fully engage with knowledge, whether for a specific purpose or for its own sake, DePaul students are encouraged to develop the ability to think critically and imaginatively, formulate their own understanding, and effectively communicate their ideas. This goal articulates specific skills that comprise these broader abilities.

Outcomes: DePaul graduates will be able to:

- systematically access, analyze and evaluate information and ideas from multiple sources in order to identify underlying assumptions, and formulate conclusions.
- solve quantitative problems.
- create and support arguments using a variety of approaches.
- use existing knowledge to generate and synthesize ideas in original ways.
- communicate clearly in speech and writing.

Goal 3. Personal and Social Responsibility

This goal honors the notion that knowledge reflects and contributes to the values of individuals and communities. DePaul students, in particular, are challenged to consider their own values in light of the university’s mission.

Outcomes: DePaul graduates will be able to:

- articulate their own beliefs and convictions, as well as others’ beliefs, about what it means to be human and... to create a just society

- articulate what is entailed in becoming a self-directed ethical decision-maker and living a life of personal integrity.
- evaluate ethical issues from multiple perspectives and employ those considerations to chart coherent and justifiable courses of action.
- benefit their communities through socially responsible engagement and leadership.

Goal 4. Intercultural and Global Understanding

This goal speaks to the likelihood that, in our diverse and increasingly interdependent world, the future depends on individuals being able to learn from each other and make the best use of finite resources.

Outcomes: DePaul graduates will demonstrate:

- respect for and learning from the perspectives of others different from themselves.
- knowledge of global interconnectedness and interdependencies.
- knowledge to become a steward of global resources for a sustainable future.

Goal 5. Integration of Learning.

Given the wide range of opportunities for learning at DePaul, it is important for students to develop the ability to consider relationships among individual experiences of learning so as to make meaning of their education in all its variety.

Outcomes: DePaul graduates will be able to:

- relate their learning -- curricular and co-curricular -- to multiple fields and realms of experience.
- make connections among ideas and experiences in order to synthesize and transfer learning to daily practice.
- design, develop, and execute a significant intellectual project.

Goal 6. Preparation for Career and Beyond

This final learning goal builds on all the rest and calls on students to be ready to apply their knowledge and skills to the changing world that awaits them.

Outcomes: DePaul graduates will be able to effectively:

- set goals for future work that are the result of realistic self-appraisal and reflection.
- articulate their skills and knowledge and represent themselves to external audiences.
- work toward goals independently and in collaboration with others.
- employ technology to create, communicate, and synthesize ideas.
- set priorities and allocate resources.
- apply strategies for a practice of life-long learning.

Additional Notes

These University Learning Goals and Outcomes were approved by Faculty Council and the Interim Provost in October 2012.

A prior version of this document was drafted in Spring 2011 by a group of faculty, staff and students in the early stages of the strategic planning process that led to Vision 2018. In Autumn 2011, at Faculty Council’s direction, the draft went to the university’s Committee on Learning and Teaching, which sought input from stakeholders across the university and incorporated their valuable contributions into the revised document here. As a result of this process, the University Learning Goals and Outcomes represent a true community effort.

These university-wide goals do not exhaust the learning goals pursued at DePaul. Notably, they do not explicitly refer to the expectations specific to the various schools and departments. Nor will they be pursued in the same manner nor to the same degree in every unit. Nevertheless, the education of all recipients of DePaul undergraduate degrees should be characterized by these goals along with the goals specific to the student's unit. Since graduate and professional schools encounter students at different stages of their education and at different levels of maturity, their approaches to these goals and their methods of measuring them will have to be adjusted accordingly.
Academic Advising, Statement on

Academic Advising at DePaul helps students achieve their educational, personal, and career goals by providing guidance and assistance in the decision-making process. Academic Advising is most effective when all participants anticipate their future needs, commit to the process, do their part, and then reflect on their results. Students should work closely with their advisors to plan workable educational goals, to understand the degree options and requirements, to understand the financial implications of their decisions, to assess their strengths and challenges as scholars, and to clarify realistic career objectives for themselves upon graduation.

Students bear ultimate responsibility for decisions and actions that determine their success at DePaul University.

- Students will make informed decisions and register for classes on time.
- Students will obtain the necessary information for course selection and planning in their individualized programs.
- Students will make and keep appointments with their advisors.
- Students will communicate honestly and fully in these advising discussions.
- Students will regularly reflect on the consequences, both academic and financial, of their decisions as they progress in their academic careers toward life choices.

Advisors are responsible for helping students improve their decision making skills.

- Advisors guide students through this learning process during regular interactions at key points during their academic careers.
- Advisors will be available on a regular basis for consultation and encourage students to make and keep regular advising appointments.
- Advisors will monitor their advisees’ academic progress.
- Advisors will encourage students to consult available material related to their program and career choice.
- Advisors will encourage students to reflect on the academic and financial consequences of their decisions about degree programs and course-taking plans.
- Advisors will assist students to set realistic career goals that extend beyond their time at DePaul.
- Advisors will encourage students to incorporate their basic values and beliefs into their decision making process.

The university is responsible for providing the infrastructure for students, faculty, and staff to support effective advising.

- The university will provide the information that students and their advisors need to make informed and timely decisions.
- The university will provide adequate resources of personnel, funding and facilities to support the advising process.
- The university will clearly communicate to advisors and students the policies and options regarding student financial aid.
- The university will regularly evaluate the policies and procedures surrounding advising to improve the advising process on an ongoing basis.
- The university will provide training to help both advisors and students work more effectively together.
- The university will acknowledge the important contribution advisors make by recognizing advising within the institutional reward system.

Financial Aid

Financial aid applicants must meet the federal eligibility requirements for aid, and if asked, provide documents as needed to support eligibility:

- You must be a U.S. citizen or eligible non-citizen.
- You must be accepted and currently active in a graduate or professional degree program, or a financial aid-eligible non-degree graduate program. For most financial aid programs, and for loan deferment, you must enroll in your program at least half-time. Your classes must be taken for credit and must be part of your degree program.
- Audited courses are not eligible for financial aid consideration. In addition, if it is determined that you have completed your degree or your aid-eligible non-degree graduate program requirements, or if you wish to repeat a course for which you have previously earned credit, your financial aid options are limited and you should contact the Office of Financial Aid at DePaul Central for more information.
- You must be in good academic standing and making satisfactory academic progress in your course of study.
- You must not be in default on any federal loan or owe a repayment on any federal grant.
- You must comply with all federal regulations governing Selective Service registration and use of funds for educational purposes.
- You must meet all federal eligibility requirements. To learn more about these eligibility requirements, including information about any prior drug conviction and federal student aid eligibility, please refer to the FAFSA questions and answers at http://studentaid.ed.gov/eligibility.

Additional information is available on the Financial Aid website.
Scholarships

Scholarships and assistantships are awarded at the program level by your college office and academic department. Please consult your college or school for additional information. You may also visit DePaul Scholarship Connect throughout the year to see specific scholarship opportunities available.

Double Demon Scholarship

Alumni from any of DePaul’s colleges who are admitted into a graduate degree program or a select certificate program* in one of the colleges listed below automatically qualify for the Double Demon Scholarship.

This scholarship covers 25 percent of the tuition for a master's degree or a select certificate program.* Both full-time and part-time students are eligible. No scholarship application is required; all alumni admitted to these programs beginning with the winter quarter of 2014 or thereafter qualify. This scholarship cannot be used in conjunction with other DePaul scholarships, waivers or awards.

DePaul University employees are eligible for other employee tuition benefits through the university, and therefore are not eligible for the Double Demon Scholarship.

Veterans Assistance

The Office of Financial Aid handles the following VA educational benefit programs:

- The Post-9/11 GI Bill® (Chapter 33) - for those who served at least 30 consecutive days on active duty after September 10, 2001
- The Post-9/11 GI Bill® Yellow-Ribbon program - for qualified Post-9/11 applicants
- The Montgomery GI Bill® – Active Duty (Chapter 30) - for those who enlisted after 7/1/1985
- The Montgomery GI Bill® – Selective Reserve (Chapter 1606)
- The Montgomery GI Bill® – Reservist Educational Assistance Program (Chapter 1607)
- The Survivors’ and Dependents’ Educational Assistance Program (Chapter 35) - for spouses and children of deceased or disabled veterans
- The Vocational Rehabilitation Program (Chapter 31) - for disabled veterans approved by Veterans Affairs for study at DePaul
- The Marine Sergeant John David Fry Scholarship – this additional provision of the Post-9/11 GI Bill® may be awarded to a surviving spouse and children of an active duty member of the Armed Forces, who has died in the line of duty, on or after September 11, 2001. Eligible children may be married and under the age of 33.

Additional information specific to veteran students is available through the Admission and Aid website.

DePaul DREAM Statement

At DePaul University we affirm the dignity of the individual. We value diversity and culture because these are part of our core values and traditions as a Catholic, Vincentian, and urban university. DePaul University has decided to take a strong and public stand for supporting undocumented students, and DREAM Act legislation. We believe supporting undocumented students is smart policy that will yield significant benefits for our university, city, state, and nation. We also know these young people who enter our doors are part of the next great generation who will build our collective future. It is for this reason that DePaul admits students regardless of their citizenship status. Because we welcome these students, it is incumbent upon all members of the DePaul community to understand DePaul’s position on assisting undocumented students, realize the value that they bring to our university, and support their success as we support all of our students.

General Information

This section of the handbook provides an alphabetical listing of all University policies, procedures, and regulations related to academics. As a student, you are responsible for adhering to the policies, procedures, and regulations included here, so please familiarize yourself with them. In addition, consult your college or school catalog for information specific to your program.
Academic Integrity

DePaul University is a learning community that fosters the pursuit of knowledge and the transmission of ideas within a context that emphasizes a sense of responsibility for oneself, for others and for society at large. To preserve the quality of education offered to students, the university is responsible for maintaining academic integrity and protecting all those who depend on it, including DePaul's community partners and institutional affiliates. Violations of academic integrity, in any of their forms, are, therefore, detrimental to the values of DePaul, to the students' own development as responsible members of society, to the pursuit of knowledge, and to the transmission of ideas. All members of the university community share the responsibility for creating conditions that support academic integrity.

Violations of academic integrity include but are not limited to the following categories: cheating; plagiarism; fabrication; falsification or sabotage of research data; destruction or misuse of the university's academic resources, alteration or falsification of academic records; academic misconduct; and complicity. Violations do not require intent. This policy applies to all courses, programs, learning contexts, and other activities at the university, including but not limited to experiential and service-learning courses, study abroad programs, internships, student teaching, providing false information on an application, and not disclosing requested information. If an instructor finds that a student has violated the Academic Integrity Policy, the appropriate initial sanction is at the instructor's discretion. Actions taken by the instructor do not preclude the university from taking further action, including dismissal from the university. Conduct that is punishable under the Academic Integrity Policy could also result in criminal or civil prosecution.

Additional Information and the complete Academic Integrity policy can be found on the Academic Integrity website (http://academicintegrity.depaul.edu/).

Admission

Admission decisions at DePaul University are based on a strong academic record, as well as personal and occupational achievements, ambition, energy, resourcefulness and leadership. The University recognizes that each individual brings unique abilities to the DePaul community and works with every student through a personalized and holistic application process. DePaul University does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, religion, gender, sexual orientation, age or handicap in admissions, employment, or the provision of services.

For information on the types of admission, see the Admission page in the University Information section of this handbook.

Dismissal/Readmission

Dismissal and Readmission decisions are made by each graduate program. Please consult your school or college catalog for additional information.
Cross-listing Graduate with Undergraduate Courses

The Department of Education (ED) wants to ensure that students in graduate programs are earning credit for graduate-level work and that federal financial aid is going to support work toward a graduate degree. In its charge to carry out the ED rules, our accreditor, the Higher Learning Commission of the North Central Association, has called on institutions to create policies that will "distinguish the various levels of learning that the institution offers, such as graduate and undergraduate, and may distinguish among departments or disciplines."

Graduate programs will continue to abide by the policies set out in the Graduate Handbook of the DePaul University Catalog. In addition, to ensure that graduate programs are appropriately distinct from undergraduate programs in the same or a related discipline, all graduate degree programs will include the following:

1. A core of courses that is offered solely at the graduate level, supported by a written rationale for the content of the core.

2. Course syllabi, including learning outcomes and assignments appropriate for graduate-level coursework. Any graduate courses that are cross-listed with undergraduate courses must have separate syllabi for each side of the cross-list, with distinct learning outcomes and assignments for each group. Undergraduate courses must be at the 300-level or above to be cross-listed with a graduate course.

Evaluation and Credit/Limitations

Consult your graduate program for information regarding the transfer of graduate credit from other institutions.

FERPA/Annual Notification

Annual Notification for DePaul Students: Your FERPA Rights

We want to take this opportunity to provide you with a summary of your rights under The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), the federal law that governs release of and access to student education records. Please view Understanding FERPA, a DePaul Central Learning Center video for information and instructions.

Your FERPA rights include:

1. The right to inspect and review your education record within 45 days after the University receives a request for access. If you want to review your record, contact the University office that maintains the record to make appropriate arrangements.

2. The right to request an amendment of your education record if you believe it is inaccurate or misleading. If you feel there is an error in your record, you should submit a statement to the University official responsible for the record, clearly identifying the part of the record you want changed and why you believe it is inaccurate or misleading. That office will notify you of their decision and advise you regarding appropriate steps if you do not agree with the decision.

3. The right to provide written consent before DePaul discloses personally identifiable information contained in your education records, except to the extent that FERPA authorizes disclosure without consent.
Some examples of exceptions include:

- School officials with "legitimate educational interests." A school official has a legitimate educational interest if the official has a professional need to review your education record in order to fulfill his or her official responsibilities. Examples of people who may have access, depending on their official duties, and only within the context of those duties, include: university faculty and staff, agents of the institution, students employed by the institution or who serve an official institutional committees, and representatives of agencies under contract with the University.

- To officials of another school where the student seeks or intends to enroll, or where the student is already enrolled if the disclosure is for purposes related to the student's enrollment or transfer.

- To authorized representatives of the U.S. Comptroller General, the U.S. Attorney General, the U.S. Secretary of Education, or state and local educational authorities, such as a state postsecondary authority that is responsible for supervising the university's state-supported education programs. Disclosures under this provision may be made in connection with an audit or evaluation of federal- or state-supported education programs, or for the enforcement of or compliance with federal legal requirements that relate to those programs. These entities may make further disclosures of personally identifiable information to outside entities that are designated by them as their authorized representatives to conduct any audit, evaluation, enforcement or compliance activity on their behalf.

- In connection with financial aid for which the student has applied or which the student has received, if the information is necessary to determine eligibility for the aid, determine the amount of the aid, determine the conditions of the aid, or enforce the terms and conditions of the aid.

- To organizations conducting studies for, or on behalf of, the school, in order to: (a) develop, validate or administer predictive tests; (b) administer student aid programs; or (c) improve instruction.

- To accrediting organizations in order to carry out their accrediting functions.

- To appropriate officials in connection with a health or safety emergency.

- Information the school has designated as "directory information."

Directory information may be released without your written consent and includes the following: name, address, e-mail, telephone number, date of birth, college of enrollment, year in school, major, enrollment status (including current enrollment, dates of attendance, full-time/part-time or withdrawn), degrees, awards and honors received (e.g., Dean's List recognition), participation in officially recognized activities and sports, weight and height of members of athletic teams, photographs (including ID pictures), videos depicting and/or concerning University life, and previous educational institutions attended. Please note that you have the right to withhold the release of directory information except to the extent that FERPA authorizes disclosure without consent (see #3 above).

To withhold the release of your directory information, you must log into the student portal, Campus Connect, and, under Student Privacy settings, indicate your preference. Please note two important details regarding placing a "No Release" on your record:

1. A "No Release" on your record will prevent your name from being included on lists of students released to honor societies, dean's list and graduation announcements to local newspapers, and enrollment and degree verification to anyone, including potential employers.

2. A "No Release" applies to all elements of directory information on your record.

4. The right to file a complaint with the U.S. Department of Education concerning alleged failures by the University to comply with the requirements of FERPA.

For additional information, please consult the U.S Department of Education (http://www2.ed.gov/policy/gen/guid/fpco/ferpa/index.htm/) website.

Questions concerning FERPA should be referred to DePaul Central:

Final Exams

During the regular academic year faculty are expected to include a final examination, final project or final exercise in all classes. In order to provide students with sufficient time to prepare, a final examination (or exercise) is expected to take place on the scheduled examination date and period as approved by the university. Final projects that are substituted for a final examination or exercise are expected to be due at the time of the scheduled examination date and period. Only under rare circumstances and with the permission of the dean of the college may this allocated period of time for the completion of course work be shortened.

Grades

Grades can be accessed online via Campus Connect. Grades can be viewed and printed using the Unofficial Transcript in the Student Center in Campus Connect. This comprehensive report can be used for corporate tuition reimbursement. Some companies may allow the student to log onto Campus Connect with a company representative present to verify grades for an individual term.

Following is the key to the system of evaluating a student’s academic achievement of the educational objectives specified by the instructor in the course syllabus. These definitions apply to the straight letter grade. A plus grade represents slightly higher achievement than the straight letter grade. A minus grade represents slightly lower achievement than the straight letter grade. For undergraduate students, the addition of a # indicates an original attempt of a course which has been repeated; therefore the grade and credit are removed from the term and cumulative grade point average and credit hours.

Once a grade is assigned, university policy prohibits faculty from changing the grade without the permission of the college-based exceptions committee. Errors made in computation of the final grade (clerical error) and removal of an IN grade in accordance with university policy are exceptions to the grade change policy. Faculty may not assign or accept additional graded material in order to improve a student’s final grade.

A  The instructor judged the student to have accomplished the stated objectives of the course in an EXCELLENT manner.
B  The instructor judged the student to have accomplished the stated objectives of the course in a VERY GOOD manner.
C  The instructor judged the student to have accomplished the stated objectives of the course in a SATISFACTORY manner.
D  The instructor judged the student to have accomplished the stated objectives of the course in a POOR manner. (A grade of D will not fulfill the requirements in a major field of concentration.)
F  The instructor judged the student NOT to have accomplished the stated objectives of the course.
FX Student failed to accomplish the stated objectives of the course due to non-attendance. Non-attendance is defined as never attending or ceasing to attend an in-person course (or never participating or ceasing to participate in an online course) without officially withdrawing. The FX is calculated into the student’s GPA as an F. Instructors are required to provide the last date of attendance/participation.
IN Temporary grade indicating that, following a request by the student, the instructor has given his or her permission for the student to receive an incomplete grade. In order to receive an IN grade, the student must have a) a satisfactory record in the work already completed for the course, b) encountered unusual or unforeseeable circumstances which prevent him/her from completing the course requirements by the end of the term, and c) applied to the instructor for permission to receive an IN. Please see the Grades, Incomplete (IN) and Research (R) Expiration Policy page in this handbook for additional information.
Permanent grade assigned to a degree recipient who chooses not to resolve a grade of "IN" awarded during the two terms prior to graduation. The grade of "ING" (Incomplete, Graduated) is final, and cannot be changed or lapsed to "F" once the degree is posted.

Passing achievement in a pass/fail course. (Grades A through D represent passing performance.)

Withdrawal from the course initiated by the student after the Last Day to Drop With No Penalty and before the Withdrawal Deadline. The W grade is automatically recorded on the student’s transcript once it has been processed.

Withdrawal from the course initiated by an advisor or administrator at the student’s request, usually outside of established deadlines. Administrative withdrawals may be granted under extraordinary circumstances and require documentation for support. See the Withdrawal Policy page in this handbook for more information. During their DePaul career, students may be allowed one medical/personal approved administrative withdrawal and one college office administrative withdrawal, each for one or more courses in a single term.

Temporary grade indicating that the student is making satisfactory progress in a course that formally extends beyond the end of a term. Only designated courses are eligible for R grades. Please see the R grade expiration policy on the Grades, Incomplete (IN) and Research (R) Expiration Policy page in this handbook for additional information.

Permanent grade assigned to a degree recipient who chooses not to resolve a grade of "R" awarded during the last year prior to graduation. The grade of "RG" (Research, Graduated) is final, and cannot be changed or lapsed to "F" once the degree is posted.

Final grade not submitted by instructor.

Auditor status; course does not earn credit.

Quality Points

Quality points are awarded to a student in relation to the grade given and the number of quarter hours of credit attempted in the course. Quality points are awarded according to the following schedule:

Grade Point Average

In general, a student’s grade point average is computed by dividing the total number of quality points accumulated by the total number of credit hours attempted with quality points assigned. In addition, a number of graduate programs have specific regulations regarding the computation of the grade point for coursework outside the program. The grade point average is calculated only upon grades earned at DePaul University.

Grades, Challenges to

A. General Policies on Grading

1. Grades are determined solely on the basis of the academic performance of each student according to pre-established criteria determined by the course instructor and consistent with university, college and departmental policies.
2. Grade determination is the prerogative of the instructor subject to the constraint that any successfully challenged grade will be changed through faculty action.
3. The criteria for evaluating academic performance are to be consistent with a course's goals and objectives, which have been approved by the appropriate academic authority before the course is scheduled. On the first day of class of each course the instructor is to explain in writing to the students the criteria for evaluating as well as the methods for grading student performance (examinations, papers, reports, etc.).
4. The instructor in each course shall decide what criteria and methods for evaluating students are to be applied in the specific course. These decisions of the instructor, however, must be compatible with any policies previously accepted by the faculty of a department or college with respect to particular courses, especially courses offered in sequence where the qualifications of a student to begin an advanced course depend upon performance in a previous course. The methods of conducting a course are determined by the instructor within limitations set by the classification of a course as lecture-discussion, seminar, laboratory, etc. An instructor may vary the teaching methodology to meet particular circumstances of a course (type or number of students enrolled, concentrated calendar as in summer sessions, etc.) or the instructor's own desires to innovate or experiment with different approaches.

Any method selected must be compatible with the predetermined goals and objectives of the course. While teaching methodology may change after the course has begun, grading methodology may be changed only with the consent of a majority of students in the course, taking into consideration hardships imposed upon students opposed to the change.
5. The actual evaluation and grading of academic performance is subject to the professional judgment of each instructor. Considerable personal discretion is required in these judgments - a justifiable margin of difference can exist between the evaluations made by two or more professional persons of the same academic performance.
6. Students are entitled to compare their work in the course with the criteria applied in deciding the final grade for the course. Accordingly, the course instructor is required either to return major papers and examinations to students or to make such available for students until the end of the following term. Spring Quarter materials are to be available until the end of the Autumn Quarter. For pedagogic reasons, an instructor is expected to review with the student the relative success of the student's accomplishments. The instructor is not expected to debate the grading.
7. A student may object to a grade for one or more of the following reasons:
   1. The methods or criteria for evaluating academic performance, made explicit by the instructor at the beginning of the course, usually in a course syllabus or as subsequently modified with the majority consent of the students, were not actually applied in determining the grade.
   2. The grade was determined or influenced by criteria other than those explained by the instructor or by criteria not relevant to academic performance.
   3. The instructor applied predetermined criteria unfairly, which may include but not be limited to the following items:
1. The instructor's evaluation of academic performance so exceeded the reasonable limits of the instructor's discretion as not to be acceptable to the instructor's peers.
2. Predetermined criteria were not explained at the beginning of the quarter or semester.

B. Policies Regarding Grade Challenge

1. All Grade Challenge Review Boards must follow the procedures listed below.
2. A challenge to a grade will be reviewed and decided by tenured faculty unless the college or school has an insufficient number of tenured faculty to staff a Review Board.
3. The student who challenges a grade bears the full burden of proof that there are sufficient grounds for changing a grade.
4. Only the final grade of a course and its means of determination may be challenged.

C. Procedures for Establishing Grade Challenge Review Boards

1. At the beginning of each academic year, the Committee on Committees will recommend to the Faculty Council, the faculty members and alternates for one Review Board for each of the following colleges: Business, Computing and Digital Media, Communication, Education, Law, Music, School for New Learning, Science and Health, and Theatre.
2. It will recommend two boards for Liberal Arts and Social Sciences covering the following areas: Humanities and Behavioral and Social Sciences. The Faculty Council will make all appointments to Review Boards. The dean of a college may request the establishment of additional Review Boards.
3. Each Review Board will consist of three faculty members and two alternate faculty members and one student. Faculty members may not serve on challenges in which they are involved. Involvement includes assignment of the grade in question and/or attendance or participation in the class. In either of these cases, one of the alternates will be asked to serve.
4. The student representative on the Review Boards in Business, Computing and Digital Media, Communication, Education, Liberal Arts and Social Sciences, Science and Health, Law, Music, School for New Learning, and Theatre will be the elected Senator from the college or school. In cases where this Senator is involved in the claim; i.e., had registered for, attended or participated in the class, the SGA EVP of Academic Affairs will serve as an alternate or if necessary, the president may appoint the alternate.
5. The Review Board will select its own chair and vice chair (to serve in the absence of the chair). The Chair of the Review Board receives all requests for hearing from the dean or chair of the affected department, sets the calendar, notifies all board members and involved parties of the dates and times of the hearings and informs students by written notice of the recommendations of the board. The chair is responsible for adherence to the Procedures for Filing a Grade Challenge.
6. The boards will serve until the beginning of the Autumn Quarter of the academic year.
7. A quorum of the Review Board consists of three members of the board. Challenges will be upheld by a vote of three or more of the four member board. All members are voting members.
8. The members of the Review Board are expected to disqualify themselves should a conflict of interest arise.

D. Procedures for Filing a Grade Challenge

In order to provide a forum for the fair resolution of academic disputes involving individual students and appropriateness of course grades, the following procedures have been developed and will be applied to all cases involving DePaul University students.

1. A student who is considering a grade challenge must discuss the grade with the instructor before the end of the following regular term. (Spring and Summer Quarter challenges must be made before the end of the Autumn Quarter. Law students challenging a Fall semester grade have a deadline of March 1 of the following Spring semester. Law students challenging a Summer/Spring semester grade have a deadline of October 1 of the following Fall semester) The instructor is expected to explain the reason for the grade to the student. Only if the instructor is not at the university during the following regular term after the grade was issued, may the student proceed to challenge the grade without meeting with the instructor.
2. If, after the discussion with the faculty member, the student still disputes the final grade, the student may continue his or her challenge by submitting a written request for a hearing to the office of dean of the college or school in which the course was offered within the term following the award of the disputed grade. Since the following burden of proof rests upon the student, it is important that the student include a clear and coherent statement (typed) with the reason for the appeal, together with any supporting documents the student may wish to include. Students may request that copies of supporting documents in possession of the faculty members be forwarded to the chair of the Review Board. All challenges will be thoroughly and fairly reviewed.
3. The dean of the college or school shall forward a copy of the request to the chair of the Review Board, the involved faculty person and the student. This must be signed and dated by the dean or chair of the affected department.
4. Once filed, the formal challenge is automatically forwarded through all stages of the appeal process unless the Review Board determines it to be groundless or frivolous. Additionally, the student has the option to discontinue the appeal at any stage by submitting a letter stating such to the instructor and chair of the Review Board.

Both the student and instructor will be informed in writing of all committee recommendations and decisions as well as any new written information bearing on the case. Only the instructor and/or the Review Board are empowered to change a grade.

5. The Review Board chair will send a copy of the grade appeal request and relevant materials received with it to the instructor involved. The instructor will return the materials with a written response within two weeks unless circumstances warrant an extension.

The chair is responsible for monitoring the time period. A copy of the instructor's response will be forwarded to the student who has filed the challenge. If the instructor does not respond within the time period, the committee will conclude its deliberations and vote on the challenge.

6. The Review Board may, at its discretion, seek oral clarification of the written responses from the student and faculty member. If it requests this further clarification, the Review Board must meet with both the student and faculty member separately if the student requests.

7. The Review Board shall evaluate the challenge and vote to approve or deny. Decisions of the Review Board arrived at by secret ballot are to be determined by a majority vote.

Such action must be taken within two months of the date of filing. (If the grade appeal is not passed along its designated route within the times specified, the student should notify the dean of the school or college who will determine the reason for the delay.)

8. The Review Board is to reach one of the three following decisions:

1. Challenge affirmed and settled by consent: i.e., the Review Board conducting the review devises a conciliation mutually acceptable to the student and the instructor who gave the grade. Should the acceptable conciliation involve a change of grade, the instructor will submit a change of grade.

2. Challenge affirmed and the Review Board may submit a change of grade card to the dean of the college or school in which the course was taught.

In determining the student's final grade, the Review Board may take into account all evidence of the student's academic performance in the course under challenge as well as the implications for the student's grade of the instructor's actions in the case in question.

3. Challenge denied; original grade stands.

9. The decision reached by the Review Board is to be communicated by the chair of the Review Board in writing directly to the dean of the college or school, the instructor, and the student. The explanation for the decision will also be communicated.

10. Decisions by the Review Board are final and binding on all parties. The board's decision does not require the approval of the dean of the college or school, or the chair of the affected department.

Grades, Incomplete (IN) and Research (R) Expiration Policy

Incomplete (IN) Grade

Undergraduate and graduate students have at most two quarters to complete an incomplete. At the end of the second quarter (excluding summer) following the term in which the incomplete grade was assigned, the incomplete will automatically convert to an F grade. In the case of the Law School, incompletes must be completed by the end of the semester following the one in which the incomplete was assigned.

A faculty member has the prerogative to assign a completion date earlier than the two quarter deadline (one semester deadline for the Law School) and this date will supersede the two quarter timeframe (one semester timeframe for the Law School) stated above.

Students must adhere to the incomplete grade request procedure of the academic unit offering the course for which they are requesting the incomplete grade.

Ordinarily no incomplete grade may be completed after the grace period has expired. Instructors may not change incomplete grades after the end of the grace period without the permission of a college-based Exceptions Committee.
In the event that the original instructor is no longer available to grade the work, the Department Chair, where applicable, or the Associate Dean will identify the faculty member who will resolve the incomplete.

NOTE: Incomplete grades are not encouraged in the student’s final two terms of study. However the exceptional cases, where an incomplete is approved in his or her final term and for students with an incomplete grade in a course from the term immediately preceding their final term of study, may result in the denial of final degree certification for that term and the regular incomplete grade policy will then be enforced.

Students who have completed degree requirements, but have an IN grade that has not yet expired can elect to have the degree posted and the IN grade changed to a permanent incomplete, ING. This grade is permanent and cannot be changed in the future. The student can also elect to postpone degree conferral until the IN grade is resolved.

Research (R) Grade

An R grade is given when a student is making satisfactory progress in a course that extends beyond the end of the term or in a project extending over more than one term. R grades, with the exception of students completing a thesis or a dissertation research course, must be completed within one academic year of the posting of the R grade or it reverts to an F grade.

A faculty member has the prerogative to assign a completion date earlier than the one academic year deadline and this date will supersede the one academic year stated above.

Ordinarily no R grade may be changed after the grace period has expired. Instructors may not change R grades after the end of the grace period without the permission of a college-based Exceptions Committee.

In the event that the original instructor is no longer available to grade the work, the Department Chair, where applicable, or the Associate Dean will identify the faculty member who will resolve the R grade.

Students who have completed degree requirements, but have an R grade that has not yet expired can elect to have the degree posted and the R grade changed to a permanent R grade. The RG (Research, Graduated) grade is permanent and cannot be changed in the future. The student can also elect to postpone degree conferral until the R is resolved.

Grades, Repeating Classes

Graduate students may have the need to repeat courses. When that occurs, all grades achieved are recorded on the academic record. All attempts are to be calculated into the grade point average. Moreover, only credit for the last attempt will be applied for the degree.

Graduation, Commencement Ceremony

The University’s annual graduate and undergraduate commencement exercises are conducted in June. Traditionally the University hosts a baccalaureate mass to which all graduating students and their families are invited the Friday of graduation weekend.

Attendance at the graduation exercise is optional, however, graduates must notify their college office of their intention by the published deadline date. Graduates will receive detailed instructions concerning the commencement exercise from the college office.
Graduation, Degree Conferral Policy

Final certification of degrees is completed by Student Records thirty days after the conferral date.

In dual degree programs authorized by the colleges, the degrees will be conferred simultaneously.

Academic records will be locked upon degree conferral. Under no circumstances will changes be made to the academic record after degree conferral.

If the student begins a new program of study at DePaul, the student’s GPA will be restarted. The one exception to this rule involves Masters’ students whose DePaul Master’s Degree is accepted to meet DePaul’s PhD requirements either in the same or a new field. In this instance the GPA in the PhD program will include the GPA from the DePaul Master’s Degree.

Combined Bachelors/ Masters Degree Program

Students combining a Masters degree with a Bachelors degree in an approved DePaul Combined Bachelor’s/Master’s Program will restart their GPA at the beginning of their graduate career.

JD/ LLM Program

In the case of students who are accepted into the joint JD/LLM program, the students’ GPA in the LLM program will include the GPA from the JD program. Students who have completed the JD degree and are independently pursuing the LLM degree will have their GPA restarted.

Graduation Requirements

1. The student must have satisfied all the requirements and regulations of the individual program and college or school granting the degree.
2. A formal application for graduation must be filed by a candidate. Application for graduation may be made only by classified degree seeking students. The student must complete the online degree conferral application in Campus Connect by the designated deadline date.

| Autumn degree conferral          | October 1 |
| Winter degree conferral          | January 15|
| Spring degree conferral          | February 1 |
| Summer degree conferral (August) | July 15    |

Submitting this on-line application does not guarantee the conferral (granting) of a degree from DePaul University. A student can change the expected completion term up to the last day of that term. Degree requirements are reviewed at the end of the expected completion term indicated. If all requirements are met, the degree will be conferred within 30 days of the end of the term. Diplomas are mailed (to graduates without financial holds), generally within 45-60 days after the end of the term.

DePaul reports degree information to the National Student Clearinghouse monthly. Many companies and agencies use this service to verify awarded degrees. A student’s degree will only be verified by the Clearinghouse if the student does not have a FERPA/Privacy restriction in Campus Connect at the time the degree is conferred. Students should verify Privacy Settings before the end of their completion term.
Graduation with Honors

Please consult your graduate program for specific information regarding graduation with honors.

Immunization, Proof of DePaul University complies with Illinois Public Act 85-1315, effective July 1, 1989, which requires post secondary institutions to submit an annual report on student immunization. Illinois law requires that all students, born on or after January 1, 1957 and enrolled half-time (Undergraduate: 6 hours, Graduate: 4 hours) or more at a post-secondary institution, provide proof of immunization for the following: Tetanus/Diphtheria, Measles (Rubella), Mumps and Rubella (German Measles). Illinois law requires that universities prevent students from registering for any subsequent terms if proof of immunization is not provided.

Please consult the Admission website for additional information.

Probation

Please consult your graduate program for information regarding probation. Academic disciplinary action including dismissal from the University may be taken by the dean of student's home college or school in accordance with the degree of the student's academic deficiency.

Registration

Students are responsible for planning their own programs and for completing course sequences and degree requirements. In planning each quarter's course of studies, students should remember that required courses take precedence over elective courses, and that some advanced courses have pre-requisites that must be completed first. Students should be guided by their interests or needs where electives are indicated. A student regularly employed is advised to discuss his or her course load for each quarter with an advisor prior to registration. Advisors are available to assist students in planning programs and schedules.

General Regulations

1. Students can add, drop, or swap classes via Campus Connect. It is the student's responsibility to verify that the transaction has been processed.
2. Students will receive credit only for classes for which they are registered.
3. Students who are not on the class roster are responsible for completing the steps necessary to resolve the issue. It is not the responsibility of the instructors to resolve the problem.
4. Student must officially register for classes by the stated deadline. For 10-week classes, the deadline is the end of the first week of the term. In addition, students should consult individual college regulations regarding special registrations (e.g., independent studies, internships, etc.).
5. The University is required to report enrollment and attendance to fulfill requirements established by several governmental agencies. To satisfy these requirements, it is University policy that attendance will be monitored in all classes. Each school or college maintains additional specific policies concerning attendance. Students should become familiar with these policies. Promptness is expected of a student for all class sessions. Tardiness of more than ten minutes is generally to be considered by the instructor as an absence.

6. Students’ status at the university will be changed from “active” to “discontinued” if:
   1. There is no enrollment in the term of admittance.
   2. There is no registration activity for three consecutive quarters - excluding summers - in which case these students must seek readmission;
   3. No progress has been made towards their degree for three consecutive terms, excluding summers. (Candidates for theses and students on year-long study abroad programs are excluded from this rule.)
7. Students who have been “discontinued,” must apply and be approved for readmission to continue their studies.

Academic Calendar Formulas

Academic calendar deadline dates are based on the following formulas. These formulas are particularly important for classes that meet outside the standard (10 week term plus finals week) start and end dates for a term. Please consult your college office for specific dates relevant to your class.

- Students may not add classes after 10% of the scheduled class has elapsed.
- Students who drop a class or classes after 20% of the scheduled class has elapsed will be responsible for 100% tuition and a grade of W will be assigned. (Note: Students who are enrolled in fully online programs and reside in the State of Maryland are subject to a refund policy that complies with the policy established by the Maryland Higher Education Commission COMAR 13B.05.01.10.)
- Students may not select a Pass/Fail grading option after 20% of the scheduled class has elapsed.
- Students may not select Audit (non-credit) grading option after 30% of the scheduled class has elapsed.
- Students may not withdraw from classes after 70% of the scheduled class has elapsed.

College/ School Regulations

- Students may audit classes only with permission of their advisor or college office. Students may not change from the status of credit to audit or vice-versa after 30% of the term has elapsed (the third week of class for a 10 week class). Full tuition is assessed for audited classes.
- Students interested in earning credit in transfer must obtain approval from their college office prior to registration at the other institution.
- Extension courses taught through other accredited institutions are accepted only when the sponsoring institution itself conducts the courses and certifies the grade and credit through an official transcript. A DePaul degree-seeking student must obtain the written permission of his or her dean before enrolling in an extension course.

Registration, Student Enrollment Classifications

College credit is accumulated on the basis of quarter hours earned:

Full-time Student Status

An eight-quarter hour course load is considered full-time for graduate studies.

Half-time Student Status

A four- to seven-quarter hour course load is considered half-time for graduate studies.

Students Completing Thesis/ Dissertation Requirements

Students should consult their program for enrollment information.

Self-service Enrollment Verifications are available through Campus Connect.
Requirement Term

Graduate Program Specific Information

A student will complete the graduate program requirements in place at the time of the student's first enrollment term in the graduate program. A student who changes graduate programs while his/her studies are in progress will complete the requirements in place at the time he or she enrolls in the new program.

A student who changes graduate programs during a break between terms (e.g. winter, spring) will follow the requirements in place for the term immediately following the break.

A student who applies for readmission will be subject to the program and concentration requirements in place in the enrollment term of readmission.

Other Information

A student currently enrolled in a degree program in which revisions are approved while their studies are in progress may elect to formally adopt the revised requirements.

Requirements, Curriculum

Official changes in courses, course numbers, titles, descriptions, and prerequisites and minor changes in program requirements may be made on a quarterly basis.

Multiple changes or thorough revisions in the requirements of a program, major, or concentration or the addition of new majors or concentrations which have received the required university approvals may be made twice each year. Changes approved by May 15th will be effective for the Autumn term, and those by October 15th will be effective for the Winter/Spring/Summer terms.

Transcripts

The Office of Student Records processes official transcript requests for DePaul University. Official transcripts can be requested on-line through Campus Connect.

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 prohibits release of confidential transcript information without the student's authorization.

Transcripts will be issued only after the student has fulfilled all financial obligations to the University.
Tuition Policy

All tuition and fees are due to DePaul University by the published tuition due date for that term. All charges must be paid in full by the payment date.

Tuition charges for any course registrations made after the due date must be paid in full within 24 hours of registration.

Tuition bills may be accessed online through Campus Connect. The student will be required to sign up for E-Bill to access their bills or to grant access to a guest user.

Students whose accounts show a balance due after the tuition due date will be subject to a late fee and prohibited from future registration, receiving transcripts and other university services.

Withdrawal Policy

A. Withdrawal from a class:

Students who must withdraw either from a course or from the University may do so by using the University's web registration system. Students unable to use the web registration system should contact their home school/college office, whether in person or by phone. Withdrawals processed via the web or through direct contact with the home school/college office are effective the day on which they are made. Simply ceasing to attend, or notifying the instructor, or nonpayment of tuition, does not constitute an official withdrawal from class and will result in academic as well as financial penalty.

B. Withdrawal from all classes:

1. Withdrawal from the university:
   In most cases, students wishing to withdraw from the university during a term must fill out an on-line form (whether from home or in the school/college office) and submit it to the student's home school/college. Students who are physically unable to contact the university may designate someone to act on their behalf. The student's official withdrawal date will be the date the form is received by that office.

2. Students who appear to be eligible to enroll but don't register.
   A student's status at the university will be changed to "discontinued" if:
   1. There is no activity for three consecutive quarters (or for Law two semesters), excluding summers. In these cases students must seek readmission.
   2. No progress has been made towards their degree for three consecutive terms, excluding summers. (Candidates for theses and students on year-long study abroad programs are excluded from this rule.) In these cases, students must meet with a college academic advisor to get permission to register and or readmission.

C. Leave of Absence

These come under three headings: personal, military, and medical. The Music and Theatre Schools already have leave of absence policies in place. Any student wishing to take a leave of absence must complete a "Leave of Absence Application." Students may complete the online form from home, or by visiting their home school/college office.

- Military: Students called for military service should fill out an on-line "Military Leave Form." Upon their return, they will meet with an academic advisor to discuss resuming their studies.
- Non-military leaves of absence are for at most one year and non-renewable during the student's career.
- Military leaves are variable depending on their orders.

D. Graduation Separation

Students must have completed all requirements by the last day of term for which they apply for degree conferral.

In the normal course, students will receive their diplomas 8-10 weeks after the date of degree conferral.
The university's responsibility is to confer the degree and identify the student as "graduated" within 30 days of the end of the term in which they complete all the requirements for their degree.

E. Late Withdrawals and Additions

1. Decision-making for late withdrawals resides primarily in the Withdrawal Appeals Committee, chaired by the Dean of Students, for personal/medical issues; and in the School/College Offices for all other issues. These principles underlie the decision-making processes:
   All policies are driven by academic concerns.
   1. Decisions are guided by the best interests of the students.
   2. Decisions will be made in compliance with federal regulations.

2. Restrictions on requesting approval for late withdrawal
   Requests for late withdrawals from one or more courses in a given quarter must be submitted to either the student's home School/College Office or the Dean of Students Office, depending on the situation that led to the requested withdrawal by the following deadlines.

   For Undergraduate/Graduate:

   Autumn Quarter: Last day of the last final exam of the subsequent winter quarter.
   Winter Quarter: Last day of the last final exam of the subsequent spring quarter.
   Spring Quarter: The end of the second week of the subsequent autumn quarter.
   Summer Terms: Last day of the last final exam of the subsequent autumn quarter.

   For the College of Law:

   Fall Semester: Last day of the final exam period for the fall semester.
   Spring Semester: Last day of the final exam period for the spring semester.
   Summer Semester: Last day of the final exam period for the summer semester.
   College of Law students filing a late withdrawal appeal in the Fall or Spring semester of the first year of law school must request withdrawal from all classes.

During their college career, students may be allowed one medical/personal approved administrative withdrawal and one college office administrative withdrawal, each for one or more courses in a single term.

Withdrawal, Tuition

Students must withdraw from classes through the registration function in Campus Connect. Students unable to use the web registration system should contact their home school/college office, whether by email, in person, or by phone. Withdrawals processed via the web or through direct contact with the home school/college office are effective the day on which they are made. Simply ceasing to attend, or notifying the instructor, or nonpayment of tuition, does not constitute an authorized withdrawal from class and will result in academic as well as financial penalty.

When the withdrawal occurs, the tuition charge for courses during a 10-week quarter will be reduced according to the following schedule, in accord with the tuition package:

- Up to 20% or 2 weeks of a ten week term: 100% refund
- After 20% of the term: 0% refund

Even if you have tuition charges reduced, you will still be responsible for the non-refundable $25 registration fee, the new student fee, and college office deposits.

Notes

- Students receiving financial aid are advised to contact a Financial Aid Counselor to discuss the consequences of a withdrawal impacting academic progress and aid eligibility at DePaul University or any other school to which they may transfer. Students in university housing are advised to contact Housing to discuss the consequences of withdrawal impacting eligibility to maintain residence.
University Resources

This section provides information on an array of university resources, all designed to help you make the most of your experience at DePaul. We encourage you to read through this whole section when you arrive at DePaul, and then refer back to individual pages for information on specific resources as you need them.

University Center for Writing-based Learning

The University Center for Writing-based Learning (UCWbL) works with all members of the DePaul University community to support writers and to promote the use of writing in teaching and learning through five major initiatives:

The Writing Center

Peer writing tutors offers DePaul students, staff, faculty, and alumni individualized and small group writing feedback on any type of writing at any stage of the writing process. Tutors provide feedback face-to-face on the Lincoln Park and Loop campuses, through written feedback via email, and real time online through IM and webcam. The Writing Center also facilitates Writing Groups at the Loop, Lincoln Park, and Suburban Campuses.

The Writing Fellows Program

The Writing Fellows Program links undergraduate peer writing tutors with writing-intensive courses across the curriculum -- from physics to journalism, religious studies to computer science. Writing Fellows work with the same set of writers from a particular course for an entire quarter, responding to two of their papers through written comments on drafts and in individual conferences.

Workshops

The UCWbL offers both in-class and in-house interactive writing workshops on topics ranging from grammar and usage to thesis development to ePortfolios.

The Collaborative for Multilingual Writing and Research (CMWR)

The CMWR is open to all members of DePaul's community interested in multilingual and cross-cultural interactions. To support English Language Learners specifically, the CMWR hosts a range of enterprises such as conversation opportunities, workshops, and publications.

Faculty Development

The UCWbL provides a range of support to DePaul instructors who teach with writing and who are working on their own writing projects.

For more information, please visit www.depaul.edu/writing.
Technology Resources

The following list introduces some of the technology resources that are available to students at DePaul. Additional information is available on the Information Services website (is.depaul.edu).

Campus Connect

Campus Connect provides access to many of DePaul's primary services, including course registration, grades, tuition billing, transcripts, Demon Express and much more.

Computer Labs and Classrooms

There are many technology-enabled classrooms across the DePaul campuses. Technology resources in these rooms include desktop computers, LCD projectors, connections for laptops, and integrated, amplified sound systems. Specialty rooms exist across the university for classes with specific needs, and additional technology is available upon request.

DePaul also has computers available for use by students, faculty or staff, located in computer labs, lounges and lobbies across the campuses. Additional technology access is available to residence hall students; each residence hall is outfitted with study lounges allowing for student access to computers and printers at any time.

CTA U-Pass

Your CTA U-Pass provides unlimited rides on the CTA bus and rail systems during an academic term. It also functions as a Ventra card, allowing you to add funds to be used during university breaks. All students meeting the requirements are automatically enrolled in the program. If your eligibility changes before the last day to drop courses, your U-Pass will be adjusted accordingly.

U-Pass pick-up dates are held at the beginning of each quarter. Students must pick up CTA U-PASS cards in person, by presenting a valid DePaul ID Card. Your Ventra U-Pass is valid for 4 years. It will be deactivated and reactivated each quarter based on your enrollment. Do not discard your U-Pass, or you will be assessed a fee by the CTA for a replacement card.

Full details regarding the U-Pass can be found on the DePaul U-Pass website http://upass.depaul.edu/.

DePaul ID Card

Your DePaul ID Card serves as your identification to enable access to various DePaul buildings, computer labs, printers, and libraries and is used to purchase items using your Demon Express account and meal plan. You must have your ID Card on hand while on campus. New students receive their ID Card at student orientation. Students can also visit ID Services to obtain an ID card.

Demon Express

Demon Express is a prepaid debit account that is linked to your DePaul ID Card. Demon Express can be used at DePaul cafeterias, coffee shops, campus bookstores, libraries, printers, copiers, and other areas.

Desire2Learn (D2L)

D2L is an electronic course management system that enables interaction between students and faculty. D2L incorporates document sharing, discussion boards, e-mail, an online grade book, assignment drop boxes, chat rooms, small group areas, online quizzes, and more. To log in, use your Campus Connect username and password. If you need assistance using D2L, training is available.

Discounts

Demon Discounts provides discounted goods and services, including computer hardware and software, to DePaul students.

E-Mail
All students are provided a free DePaul e-mail account. Additional information is available on the Information Services website.

Printing

The Intelliprint system allows students to print from DePaul computer labs. Students use their DePaul ID card to pay for prints and are entitled to a set amount of free printing per quarter. Additional funds can be added to Demon Express as needed. You may also print to the Intelliprint system wirelessly.

Residence Hall Technology

Lincoln Park residence hall rooms are equipped with high speed Internet connections, wireless Internet access, and free telephone connections.

Technical Support

The Technology Support Center (TSC) is your first point of contact for technical assistance. TSC provides free assistance via phone, e-mail and web for current DePaul students. We support all DePaul wireless networks, telephones, e-mail accounts and software.

Technology Training

Media Production and Training (MPT) offers free technology training on a variety of topics, including the Microsoft Office suite, both Mac and Windows operating systems, D2L, and more.

Wireless Internet Access

Wireless internet access is available to students on all DePaul campuses.

---

Student Involvement

The Office of Student Involvement fosters student learning and success by providing opportunities for engagement through a wide variety of campus activities and organizations, holistic and intentional advising of student leaders, and the development of purposeful and mutually beneficial partnerships across the University and City of Chicago to maximize access to resources for a rich DePaul campus experience.

Additional information is available from the Office of Student Involvement http://offices.depaul.edu/student-affairs/about/departments/Pages/student-involvement.aspx

Student Affairs

The Division of Student Affairs provides programs and services that are a direct extension of DePaul University's mission to emphasize skills and attitudes that educate students to be lifelong, independent learners. Student Affairs contributes to the DePaul student experience by cultivating learning opportunities that inspire students to explore their personal identities, faiths, values and roles in a multicultural world. Through the division's diverse offering of programs, leadership opportunities and quality support services, Student Affairs seeks to create an environment that fosters students' overall development and reduces barriers to enable students to reach their highest potential.
Office of Multicultural Student Success

The Office of Multicultural Student Success seeks to cultivate academic success and personal development for students of color, low-income college students, or first generation college students through sustained developmental programming, financial resources, and advocacy.

Additional information is available from the Office of Multicultural Student Success http://offices.depaul.edu/student-affairs/about/departments/Pages/omss.aspx.

Libraries

The University Library provides information resources and services to students, faculty, and staff at three library locations: the John T. Richardson Library in Lincoln Park, the Loop (DePaul Center) Library, and the Vincent G. Rinn Law Library. The suburban campuses have access to the full array of electronic resources provided by the Library as well as delivery service for print materials. E-journals, e-books, and scholarly databases in the humanities, business, social sciences, computer science and other sciences, are available remotely as well as on campus, notably in the new Information Commons in the Richardson Library. Print book and journal collections in the two Chicago campus libraries may be supplemented with direct borrowing from other Illinois libraries through the i-Share system and outside Illinois through the ILLiad inter-library loan system. Librarians provide research support and research skills instruction in person and via the online "Ask a Librarian" email and IM chat reference services.

Additional information is available from the DePaul University Library.

Housing Services

The Department of Housing Services provides facilities and services that create the premiere residential experience at DePaul University. Grounded in DePaul University’s Vincentian values and distinguishing marks, staff of the department of Housing Services administer the processes for living on campus and partner with others in promoting this experience. We strive to provide exceptional services within our high-quality, residential facilities while also encouraging residents’ personal growth and community responsibility.

For more information, visit http://offices.depaul.edu/housing.

Health Services

The DePaul Student Health Service is offered through Presence SAGE medical group. It is available to all enrolled students for a fee. If you live in a residence hall, with the exception of 1237 West Fullerton or University Center, you are automatically enrolled in DePaul Student Health Services.

Student Health Service is NOT health insurance; you may need additional coverage.
Financial Fitness

Financial Fitness provides free services, resources and tools to help students manage costs from freshman year through graduation and beyond. Services include:

- Confidential one-on-one financial counseling
- Accessible written and online resources and tools

Additional information is available from the DePaul Central office. Financial Fitness is located within DePaul Central's Lincoln Park Campus in SAC 101. Students can get additional information by visiting the website http://financialfitness.depaul.edu or calling (773) 325-8640.

DePaul Central

DePaul Central is your one-stop shop for help managing Financial Aid, Student Financial Accounts and Student Records. DePaul Central ensures student issues are resolved in a timely manner and with the right level of attention and care they deserve so students can focus on what really matters: their academics.

Center for Students with Disabilities

The Center for Students with Disabilities (CSD) coordinates DePaul University's provision of accommodations and other services to students with disabilities pursuant to the Americans with Disabilities Act and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act. CSD regularly works with students diagnosed with a range of disabilities such as learning disabilities, AD/HD, medical conditions, chronic illness, mental health disorders, and physical/visual disabilities, amongst others. Student success is at the core of the CSD's mission and fits integrally with DePaul University as a diverse learning community.

Students are encouraged to enroll with CSD to receive accommodations and additional support services. CSD students are enrolled in all Colleges and Schools at DePaul, and may be full-time, part-time, undergraduate, or graduate level students. Some accommodations and services may include extended time on exams, assistance with note-taking, adaptive equipment, real-time captioning, classroom accommodations, advocacy, and assistive technologies amongst other support services.

CSD enrollment procedures require appropriate documentation of a student's disability and other identified information, as well as a personal meeting with CSD staff.

CSD is also a resource for faculty and staff who may have questions about accommodating, or otherwise working with, students with disabilities.

CSD has two full-service office locations:
Lincoln Park Campus, Student Center 370, 773/325-1677
Loop Campus, Lewis Center 1420, 312/362-8002

For more information, please view the Center for Students with Disabilities website http://offices.depaul.edu/student-affairs/about/departments/Pages/csd.aspx or contact staff at csd@depaul.edu.

Career Center

The Career Center at DePaul University offers DePaul students and alumni dynamic connections to the workplace, providing comprehensive one stop career services. No matter where you are in your career search, whether it's deciding on a major or career path, making a career change, or preparing for your first job interview, we can help.

- Explore career options whether you are just starting your job search or are looking for a change.
- Get career and graduate school advice and resources from specialists in your field. Our career advisors are available to meet one-on-one with you to discuss your needs.
- Gain experience and earn academic credit with an internship through the University Internship Program.
- Find a job with one of the thousands of employers who recruit DePaul grads.
- Connect with DePaul alumni for career-related networking and mentoring.

The Career Center is located at DePaul's Lincoln Park Campus in SAC 192 and at the Loop Campus in DePaul Center 9500. Students may contact the office at (312) 362-8437 for appointments, or visit
Adult, Veteran and Commuter Student Affairs

Through collaborations with university and external partners, the Office of Adult, Veteran and Commuter Student Affairs assists students in their transition to college, provides support, resources and programs that help students persist and succeed academically, and works to promote an environment that is inclusive of the non-traditional student experience in which adult, veteran and commuter students can thrive as engaged members of the DePaul community.

General Information

To the University Community,

The Dean of Students Office is committed to partnership in the educational mission of DePaul University. This mission is enhanced by a Code of Student Responsibility, which outlines expectations and standards of behavior for the student community. Any community of more than 23,000 people needs rules. As a DePaul University student, the DePaul Code of Student Responsibility isn’t a list of things you can do wrong; it’s a code designed to protect your rights and those of all DePaul students. Any student who feels that another student in the community has violated their rights is encouraged to use this Code and the Dean of Students Office as a resource.

The Dean of Students Office can be an invaluable advocate and support in identifying resources and services for students. In an institution of such size and complexity it is often difficult to know where to begin when a student is struggling or having difficulty navigating the University setting. This office can be of particular help in areas of personal and/or family crisis, economic distress, or a medical/personal leave of absence. The office serves as principal liaison and resource for students and other divisions and departments within the University community.

Finally, our work with students is guided by the Socially Responsible Leader framework which is grounded in our Catholic, Urban and Vincentian mission. The development of socially responsible leaders in today’s complex, global and ever-changing world requires a campus community that is committed to holistic learning and the fostering of a campus community based on respect. It is our hope that you will make full use of the opportunities to reach your full potential that are available for you at DePaul University. In that regard, the Dean of Students Office is here to serve you with locations on both the Loop and Lincoln Park campuses.

Dean of Students
Student Rights

As a registered DePaul University student, the DePaul Code of Student Responsibility is designed to protect your rights and those of all DePaul students.

Student Rights

1. The University shall be open to all students who qualify under its admission standards, regardless of race, religion, national origin, age, disability, marital status, sexual orientation or gender. All students have equal right of access to the public facilities and services of the University, in accordance with University policies.
2. Students have the right to their own ideas, beliefs and political associations. Students have the right to ask questions and express their opinions without affecting their academic evaluations, as long as such do not interfere with the normal operations of their classes or infringe on the rights of other students in their classes. Instructors shall evaluate students' performances without prejudice.
3. A student has the right to a hearing within the established University procedures, in all matters that can result in the imposition of sanctions for misconduct. Usually, a student's status within the University will not be permanently altered until final outcome of any conduct action. However, the University reserves the right to take actions to reasonably ensure safety and security, including removing and/or suspending a student from the University on an interim basis pending final determination of any conduct action.
4. A student duly admitted to and registered at the University has the right to receive a clear and concise written statement concerning academic and nonacademic regulations and commitments made by the University prior to or upon initial registration for classes. A student also has the right to be advised of any changes in such matters.
5. Students have the right to join associations and are free to promote their common interests. This includes the right to become affiliated with any recognized student organization without discrimination or prejudice regarding race, color, ethnicity, religion, national origin, age, physical or mental disability, marital status, parental status, family relationship status, military status, sexual orientation, sex, gender, or other status protected by local, state, or federal law in its education settings, although fraternities and sororities are exempt from the restriction of discrimination due to gender.
6. Students have the right to participate in the governance of the University through the Student Government Association.
7. Under the guidelines established by the University, students have the right to edit and/or operate the student media.
8. In accord with University policy, for all classroom courses, a syllabus must be distributed in written form beginning on the first day of class. The dean of the college is responsible for implementing the syllabus requirements.
9. Students shall be given the opportunity to be represented at all departmental meetings by at least one full-time student majoring in the appropriate discipline. The student representative shall be chosen annually in accordance with Student Government Association guidelines and shall be a full-time voting member. The student who accepts this responsibility has the moral obligation to attend these departmental meetings.
10. Students shall have the right to vote on search committees that choose academic deans. Membership on such committees shall be achieved through the auspices of the Student Government Association.
11. Students have the right to petition institutional authority for changes in either academic or nonacademic regulations.
12. Students have the right to regular academic advisement. Undergraduate and graduate students have the right to an assigned academic advisor who is available and informed to assist and advise in class selections, to meet academic requirements and career goals.
13. Students have the right of reasonable access to University administrators and faculty during specified office hours.
14. Undergraduate and graduate students (in all colleges but the College of Law) have the right to be informed formally of their academic standing in class by the midpoint of each quarter.
15. Students have the right of protection from University personnel engaging in unreasonable search or seizure unless:
   1. there is probable cause that a violation of University policy is likely to occur, is presently occurring or has occurred;
   2. there is an apparent emergency or danger to self or others;
   3. in order to repair damage to University property;
   4. students’ rights shall always remain subject to the searches of law enforcement officers who are performing their statutory duties in accordance with legally defined procedures governing search and seizure.
Notification of FERPA Rights

Annual Notification for DePaul Students: Your FERPA Rights

We want to take this opportunity to provide you with a summary of your rights under The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), the federal law that governs release of and access to student education records. Please view Understanding FERPA, a DePaul Central Learning Center video for information and instructions.

Your FERPA rights include:
1. The right to inspect and review your education record within 45 days after the University receives a request for access. If you want to review your record, contact the University office that maintains the record to make appropriate arrangements.

2. The right to request an amendment of your education record if you believe it is inaccurate or misleading. If you feel there is an error in your record, you should submit a statement to the University official responsible for the record, clearly identifying the part of the record you want changed and why you believe it is inaccurate or misleading. That office will notify you of their decision and advise you regarding appropriate steps if you do not agree with the decision.

3. The right to provide written consent before DePaul discloses personally identifiable information contained in your education records, except to the extent that FERPA authorizes disclosure without consent.

Some examples of exceptions include:

- School officials with "legitimate educational interests." A school official has a legitimate educational interest if the official has a professional need to review your education record in order to fulfill his or her official responsibilities. Examples of people who may have access, depending on their official duties, and only within the context of those duties, include: university faculty and staff, agents of the institution, students employed by the institution or who serve an official institutional committees, and representatives of agencies under contract with the University.

- To officials of another school where the student seeks or intends to enroll, or where the student is already enrolled if the disclosure is for purposes related to the student's enrollment or transfer.

- To authorized representatives of the U.S. Comptroller General, the U.S. Attorney General, the U.S. Secretary of Education, or state and local educational authorities, such as a state postsecondary authority that is responsible for supervising the university's state-supported education programs. Disclosures under this provision may be made in connection with an audit or evaluation of federal- or state-supported education programs, or for the enforcement of or compliance with federal legal requirements that relate to those programs. These entities may make further disclosures of personally identifiable information to outside entities that are designated by them as their authorized representatives to conduct any audit, evaluation, enforcement or compliance activity on their behalf.

- In connection with financial aid for which the student has applied or which the student has received, if the information is necessary to determine eligibility for the aid, determine the amount of the aid, determine the conditions of the aid, or enforce the terms and conditions of the aid.

- To organizations conducting studies for, or on behalf of, the school, in order to: (a) develop, validate or administer predictive tests; (b) administer student aid programs; or (c) improve instruction.

- To accrediting organizations in order to carry out their accrediting functions.

- To appropriate officials in connection with a health or safety emergency.

- Information the school has designated as "directory information."

Directory information may be released without your written consent and includes the following: name, address, e-mail, telephone number, date of birth, college of enrollment, year in school, major, enrollment status (including current enrollment, dates of attendance, full-time/part-time or withdrawn), degrees, awards and honors received (e.g., Dean's List recognition), participation in officially recognized activities and sports, weight and height of members of athletic teams, photographs (including ID pictures), videos depicting and/or concerning University life, and previous educational institutions attended. Please note that you have the right to withhold the release of directory information except to the extent that FERPA authorizes disclosure without consent (see #3 above).

To withhold the release of your directory information, you must log into the student portal, Campus Connection, and, under Student Privacy settings, indicate your preference. Please note two important details regarding placing a "No Release" on your record:
1. A “No Release” on your record will prevent your name from being included on lists of students released to honor societies, dean’s list and graduation announcements to local newspapers, and enrollment and degree verification to anyone, including potential employers.

2. A “No Release” applies to all elements of directory information on your record.

4. The right to file a complaint with the U.S. Department of Education concerning alleged failures by the University to comply with the requirements of FERPA.

For additional information, please consult the U.S Department of Education (http://www2.ed.gov/policy/gen/guid/fpco/ferpa/index.htm/) website.

Questions concerning FERPA should be referred to DePaul Central:

Introduction to the Code/ Policies

A student by voluntarily joining the University community agrees to abide by the standards that have been instituted by DePaul University. Students are responsible for being familiar with all of the policies and procedures included in the Code of Student Responsibility. The Code of Student Responsibility was developed by Student Affairs to give formal recognition to the rights and responsibilities of students at DePaul University and is based on the following principles:

1. The intrinsic value of the person stands above other values. The personal rights and dignity of individuals are to be held inviolate. They take precedence over any academic goal set forth by the University.

2. The student is respected as a responsible person. He or she is, therefore, encouraged to make informed decisions with respect to his or her own education and to be involved in University decisions to the fullest extent possible.

3. The University is by definition a corporation. Just as the individual student has his or her own personal right, so the University, as a corporate person, has an obligation to exercise its rights and privileges in conformity with the laws and procedures governing its actions.

4. DePaul University recognizes that freedom to teach and freedom to learn depend upon opportunities and conditions in the classroom, on the campus and in the larger community. The responsibility to secure and respect general conditions conducive to learning is shared by all members of the academic community. Freedom is meaningless unless responsibility is also present.

The above rights can be exercised effectively and without fear only if they are incorporated into policies and regulations that are as precise and informative as possible, and only if there are adequate procedures to settle disputes that arise in their regard. The Code of Student Responsibility protects students’ rights by making explicit all conduct procedures so that no student may be subject to conduct procedures except in strict adherence to proscribed policies.

As an academic and religious institution, DePaul has a vested interest in both the safety and well-being of the members of its campus community. As a result of the high caliber of individuals DePaul University attracts, the Code of Student Responsibility reflects the emphasis on responsibility in both the academic and nonacademic areas of university life. It is the intent of the Code to provide the necessary guidelines to support and advance the educational and religious aims of the University without unduly restricting or diminishing the university experience. The Code, together with other applicable University policies, outlines the minimum acceptable level of conduct expected of every student at DePaul. The policies and procedures outlined are those that students, faculty and administrators at the University have designed to further the educational and religious aims of the institution and to assist all students in the pursuit of their educational, personal and social development.

A student by voluntarily joining the DePaul community assumes the responsibility for abiding by the standards that have been instituted by DePaul. The Vice President for Student Affairs, or his/her designees, maintains exclusive authority for imposing sanctions for behaviors that violate the Code of Student Responsibility. The Vice President for Student Affairs, or his/her designee, is also responsible for interpreting and/or implementing additional University procedures or policies to address issues that are not specifically covered by the various parts of this Code. University personnel charged with enforcement of the Code will at all times endeavor to adhere to the intent of fundamental fairness so that each student’s concern is addressed in an impartial and consistent manner.

The University may exercise jurisdiction for an offense committed on-campus. Additionally, the University may exercise jurisdiction for an offense committed off-campus (including on-line communities) when:

A. The victim of such offense is a member of the campus community (student, faculty or staff); or

B. The offense occurred at a college-sponsored or sanctioned event; or

C. The student used his or her status as a member of the University community to assist in the commission of the offense (for example student ID card to pass a bad check); or

D. The offense affects the University.

The University’s adjudication of any violation of this Code may proceed independently of any action taken by state, federal or municipal agencies. The University reserves the right to refer incidents of misconduct to civil or criminal authorities.

This Code is designed to protect the rights of all members of the University community so they can prosper academically, socially and personally. In order for this Code to work effectively, however, students must take responsibility for confronting behaviors exhibited by their peers that negatively impact their experiences and violate established standards of behavior. It is imperative that students work in partnership with University faculty and staff members to protect the rights that have been afforded them.

DePaul University reserves the right to change policies or procedures maintained herein at any time during a student’s enrollment period provided such changes are updated in the on-line Undergraduate Handbook. Students and student organizations are advised to read this Code and any other relevant policies carefully so all are aware of the policies which guide the University in its dealings with them. Students should review the Academic Policies section of the Undergraduate Handbook or contact their college office for specific information on the policies used to govern academic expectations at the University.

Alcohol

University Policy

DePaul community members owe it to themselves and others to make educated decisions about their use or distribution of alcohol. The State of Illinois prohibits the sale, use or possession of all forms of alcoholic beverages by persons under 21 years of age. Students are responsible for adhering to the university Drug Free Workplace & Legal Drinking Age Compliance policy. Students living on campus should consult the Guide to Student Housing for additional information about alcohol policies and prohibitions in the residence halls.

Health Promotion & Wellness

DePaul University expects students to uphold the law when it comes to the purchase and consumption of alcohol. This institution also seeks to educate students about making safe, responsible decisions when it comes to substance use. The Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist is the point of contact for all outreach and initiatives pertaining to responsible substance use. Students who are found responsible for violating DePaul University’s alcohol policy may be mandated to meet with the Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist and participate in an intervention called BASICS (Brief Alcohol Screening and Intervention for College Students). Other students may also request to meet with the Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist and/or participate in BASICS. Students who have concerns about their alcohol use (or someone else’s) may contact the Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist at any time and will not get into trouble for seeking help or information. The Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist can be reached at (773) 325-4550.

Students should be prepared to seek help or call 911 when a peer may be experiencing a drug overdose or alcohol poisoning. Students are expected to take action in such situations and not be a passive bystander. Here are the symptoms of alcohol poisoning, and remember that not all symptoms need to be present for alcohol poisoning.

DePaul University Autumn 2015-2016 Page 2481 of 2506
poisoning to occur:

- Person is unconscious and cannot be roused;
- Person is in a stupor or exhibits confusion;
- Person is vomiting (prop unconscious persons on their sides so that they won't choke on their own vomit);
- Skin is pale, has a blue tinge, and/or skin is unusually cold to the touch;
- Abnormally slow breathing (less than 8 breaths per minute) and/or irregular breathing (a gap of more than 10 seconds between breaths);
- Seizures.

Drug overdoses can vary depending on the drug consumed, but here is a general list of symptoms that indicate help is needed. Remember that not all symptoms need be present for an overdose to occur:

- Abnormal pupil size;
- Agitation, aggressive, and/or violent behavior;
- Convulsions;
- Delusional or paranoid behavior;
- Difficulty breathing;
- Drowsiness;
- Hallucinations;
- Nausea and vomiting;
- Nonreactive pupils (pupils that do not change size when exposed to light);
- Staggering or unsteady gait;
- Sweating or extremely dry, hot skin;
- Tremors;
- Unconsciousness or death.

Additionally, the following regulations govern alcohol use by students and student organizations:

1. All casual possession or consumption of alcohol by students in designated common or non-reserved areas on university premises is prohibited regardless of age.
2. For specific policies regarding alcoholic beverages in the residence halls, please see the Guide to Student Housing.
3. Consumption of alcohol which results in behavior that infringes on the rights of others in the community is prohibited.
4. Alcoholic beverages may not be served at student-sponsored or student organization-sponsored events without written authorization from the Dean of Students or his/her designee. Authorization will not be given to any student organization that is hosting an event at which students under 21 will, or could be, present. Notification of such authorization will be sent to the student organization itself, the organization's moderator/advisor, the building director and the Public Safety Office.

This authorization will detail the provisions for maintaining control of the consumption of alcoholic beverages at the event. In making the final determination for authorization, the Dean of Students or his/her designee will consider the following points:

1. The presence of adequate control measures (e.g., hiring a professional bartender to serve alcohol, security presence of university representative, method of age identification and monitoring of the event, etc.);
2. The type of event;
3. Adherence to area/building procedures;
4. The presence of food and nonalcoholic beverages in a prominent place; and
5. The possible requirement of a special events permit or other license to dispense alcoholic beverages.

Depending on the location and type of event, student organizations that are sponsoring events should also consult the Catering Services Exclusivity policy and Catering Donations policy.

Student organizations may not advertise the availability of alcohol in their event publicity.

When student organizations sponsor events at which alcoholic beverages are offered for consumption, the organization and its officers shall be solely responsible for the conduct of such affairs in accord with civil law and university policies.
Civil or Criminal Law

Any student who violates any state, federal or municipal law shall be subject to conduct action for said offense(s) up to and including suspension and expulsion. The adjudication of such violations may proceed regardless and/or independently of any action taken by state, federal or municipal agencies.

Damage to Personal or Private Property

A student shall take no action that damages, or tends to damage, personal or private property not his or her own without the consent of the owner or person legally responsible for such property.

Demonstrations

Orderly and peaceful demonstrations on the campus are permitted. However, the University has the obligation to ensure the safety of individuals, the protection of property and the continuity of the educational process. When picketing or other forms of peaceful protest take place outside University buildings, the University insists on the right of free passage for all through the areas where members of the University community have a right to be. When such demonstrations take place inside University buildings, the University insists on orderliness, free passage to all rooms, lack of excessive noise, and no interference with classes, libraries, offices, assemblies or normal administrative functions. Students participating in off-campus demonstrations will be subject to University discipline for reasons stated above as well as for the deliberate misrepresentation of the position of the University, outrageous abuse of the name of the University or participation in demonstrations adjacent to the campus that disrupt University functions.

Disorderly, Violent, Intimidating or Dangerous Behavior to Self or Others

Students are not to engage in behavior that threatens, harms or causes to place in harm themselves or other persons, or to exhibit behavior that is illegal, destructive, lewd, indecent, obscene or disorderly. The types of conduct that this regulation is designed to cover include, but are not limited to, the following examples:

1. Intentionally inflicting bodily harm upon any person; taking any action for the purpose of inflicting physical harm upon any person; taking reckless action that results in physical harm to any person; taking any action that creates a substantial risk of physical harm to any person; or threatening by any means of transmission the use of force to physically harm or injure any person.
2. Disrupting the peace, impeding classes, causing significant emotional harm, bullying, and/or endangering the safety, health or life of any person on campus through actions or words.
3. Obstructing fire escape routes such as hallways or stairwells.
4. Committing acts of an indecent or lewd nature.
5. Climbing or scaling the exterior of any University building or facility.
6. Production of sound through amplification or other means (including voices) that unreasonably disturbs or disrupts the peace of others or violates University standards.
7. Using electronic or other devices to make an audio or video recording of any person without his/her prior knowledge, or his/her effective consent.

Emergency Regulations

The specific emergency regulations and evacuation procedures for University buildings must be obeyed at all times to ensure the safety of all.

False Information

Students are not to provide false information in any form to University officials. Students are not to knowingly misuse, misrepresent or falsify any University record, I.D. card, form, computer resource or procedure. Students are not to use, possess, manufacture or distribute identification cards or devices that are false or fraudulent or that misrepresent an individual's identity, age, or other personal characteristics, including using another individual's identification.

Students who assist by any means the providing of false information as described in this expectation will be considered in violation.

Students are not to take any action (verbal, written, or behavior), based on known incorrect data, with direct intent to be hurtful or harmful to the University.

False Report of an Emergency

The intentional false reporting of a bomb, fire, attack or other emergency on any University-owned or -controlled property is strictly prohibited.

Gambling

In accordance with applicable Illinois and Federal gambling laws, DePaul University prohibits gambling or any form of illegal wagering, bookmaking or unauthorized games or contests of chance on University premises, including but not limited to University Housing and/or University-sponsored functions including sporting events. In addition, students shall not knowingly provide information to assist any individual involved in any gambling
Guest Responsibility and Visitation

Students and student organizations are responsible for the behavior of their guests while they are on property owned or controlled by the University or in attendance at its sponsored events. The host students or student organizations assume full responsibility for their guests’ compliance with all proscribed University policies and procedures, including those specific to building hours and residence hall visitation.

Hazing

The hazing of students at DePaul University is strictly prohibited. Hazing is defined in accordance with all applicable local, state, and/or federal laws and includes any action taken or situation created to produce mental or physical discomfort, embarrassment, ridicule or endangerment of a student or group of students for the purpose of initiation into, affiliation with, or admission to, or as a condition for continued membership in a group, team, club or other organization. Such activities include, but are not limited to: use/abuse of alcohol, paddling in any form, creation of excess fatigue, physical and psychological shocks, treasure hunts, scavenger hunts, road trips or other similar activity, wearing of public apparel that is conspicuous and normally not in good taste, and morally degrading or humiliating games and activities. Acceptance of an activity on the part of a new member or individual does not justify participation in or sponsorship of the activity.

Illegal Use or Possession of Drugs or Controlled Substances

University Policy

Students may not illegally use, sell, possess or distribute any substance prohibited by State Law, federal law, or other applicable law on University-owned or -controlled property. The University reserves the right to take any action deemed necessary to protect the University's interests and the safety of its students in cases involving the use, sale, possession or distribution of illegal or controlled drugs. Students are responsible for adhering to the university Drug Free Workplace & Legal Drinking Age Compliance policy. Students living on campus should consult the Guide to Student Housing for additional information about prohibited substances within the residence halls.

Students should be aware that it is unlawful to distribute prescription medication to other students for whom the medication was not prescribed. In addition to illegal drugs such as marijuana, hallucinogens, narcotics, club drugs, and medications obtained without a prescription for the user, the following substances are prohibited on campus: MDPV or “bath salts,” Salvia, K2, and Spice.

Health Promotion & Wellness

DePaul University expects students to uphold laws prohibiting the purchase and use of drugs and controlled substances prohibited by State Law, federal law, or applicable law. DePaul University also seeks to educate students about making safe, responsible decisions when it comes to substance use. The Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist is the point of contact for all outreach and initiatives pertaining to responsible substance use. Students who are found responsible for violating DePaul University's Illegal Use or Possession of Controlled Substances policy may be mandated to meet with the Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist, and may also be asked to participate in an intervention called BASICS (Brief Alcohol Screening and Intervention for College Students). Other students may also request to meet with the Alcohol & Drug Prevention Specialist and/or participate in BASICS. Students who have concerns about their drug use (or someone else’s) may contact the Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist at any time and will not get into trouble for seeking help or information. The Alcohol & Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist can be reached at (773) 325-4550.

Students should be prepared to seek help or call 911 when a peer may be experiencing a drug overdose or alcohol poisoning. Students are expected to take action in such situations and not be a passive bystander. Here are the symptoms of alcohol poisoning, and remember that not all symptoms need to be present for alcohol poisoning to occur:

- Unconsciousness or death.

Information Display

Students and external groups may not distribute post, affix or otherwise attach writing or any printed materials (i.e., posters, signs, handouts, brochures, handbills, pamphlets, etc.) on University property without proper authorization. All information display and distribution must be in accordance with the University policies. Further information on University policies regarding Information Display and Distribution may be obtained from the Office of Student Involvement, the DePaul Student Center Information Desk or Residential Education.

Student Conduct Process Compliance

A student who fails to agree to participate in a required Student Conduct Process or abide by a conduct sanction, takes action to influence or coerce testimony in a Student Conduct Process, takes action that disrupts, or impairs the Student Conduct Process, or attempts to retaliate against a complainant or witness on account of their participation in the Student Conduct Process may be found in violation of failure to comply with the Student Conduct Process.
Conduct Process. Any student who knowingly provides false information and/or publically releases confidential information regarding to, or learned through, a Student Conduct Process may also be found in violation of this or other parts of the Code of Student Responsibility or other applicable institutional policy.

Reasonable Directives from a University Official or Office

Students are not to disregard reasonable directives, either verbal or written, issued by a University official or office, or obstruct an official in the carrying out of his/her assigned duties or responsibilities. Failure to follow reasonable directives may result in conduct sanctions or, if appropriate, involuntary withdrawal from the University.

Residential Education and Housing Services Policies and Procedures

Students living in DePaul housing are responsible for abiding by all of the policies and procedures set forth by Residential Education and Housing Services. Failure to do so could result in consequence imposed by those departments, as well as in additional sanctions as a violation of the Code of Student Responsibility.

Safety Equipment

The unauthorized alteration, misuse or tampering with of any equipment or device intended for use in preserving or protecting the safety of members of the University community, including but not limited to keys, exit signs, fire extinguishers, fire alarms, fire boxes, standpipes, first aid equipment or emergency telephones, is prohibited.

Theft, Misappropriation, Misrepresentation or Unauthorized Sale or Use

Students are to refrain from the unauthorized occupancy, use, possession or removal from a designated area, of property belonging to the University, its community members (faculty, staff and students), guests or vendors. Services provided to or by members or guests of the University may not be used or obtained unless authorized in advance by the appropriate agent. This includes the misuse or unauthorized use of University telephones, computer services, electronic communications, facilities or funds. Also, students may not represent themselves as having the authority to enter into contracts or agreements that affect DePaul University in any way.
Only officers of DePaul, or their specific designees, are empowered to sign contracts that bind the University. Students are not to take any action (verbal, written, or behavior), based on known incorrect data, with direct intent to be hurtful or harmful to the University.

Unauthorized Entry or Exit from University Facilities

Forcible or unauthorized entry into any building, structure, facility, room or container (file cabinet, desk drawer, etc.) on the premises of University-owned or -controlled property is prohibited. Improper use of designated exits is also prohibited.

University Policies Applicable to Students

Students must abide by all University policies applicable to them as students. Students should make themselves aware of all University policies. The policies listed below are some of the policies that are most relevant to the day to day lives of students. This list is not intended to exempt students from all other University policies applicable to students.

Space Reservations

This Policy establishes guidelines for reserving event space at DePaul University and associated rental costs. For the entire policy please check the University Secretary’s website.

Smoking Policy

The purpose of this policy is to comply with the Clean Indoor Air Ordinance of the City of Chicago, which requires all employers to adopt a smoking policy, and to protect the health and safety of students, faculty, staff and the general public while on university property.

The university maintains a smoke-free environment. Smoking is prohibited within all university buildings.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary’s website.
Sexual & Relationship Violence Prevention and Response

DePaul University is committed to providing and maintaining a healthy learning and working environment for all students, staff, and faculty members. In accordance with DePaul's Catholic and Vincentian values and its role as an educational institution, the university condemns any form of sexual or relationship violence. This policy details the ways in which the university promptly and effectively responds to reports of sexual and relationship violence. The policy also outlines the university's commitment to prevention programming and training regarding sexual and relationship violence.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.

Sales and Solicitation - Residence Halls

The use of any space in the residence halls/university apartment community for any commercial purpose except with the express written approval of the Department of Housing Services is prohibited. Solicitation by residents or any others without the explicit written approval of the Department of Housing Services is prohibited. The posting and/or distribution of any advertisement without stamped approval of the Residence Hall Council or the Department of Residential Education is prohibited.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.

Prohibition of Weapons

This policy bans weapons from University property and University-sponsored events. The policy describes limited exceptions for this prohibition on weapons and outlines the process for reporting weapons violations, as well as resulting disciplinary procedures.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.

*This page was amended in January 2014 after catalog publication to coincide with new laws going into effect in the State of Illinois

Political Campaign Activities Policy

This policy provides guidelines for DePaul University and its faculty, staff and students about political activities. DePaul, as an organization exempt from tax under Section 501(c)3, may undertake no activity whatsoever on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office, whether such office be federal, state or local.

This is an absolute prohibition. For the entire policy please check the University Secretary’s website.
HIV/AIDS Guidelines

DePaul University asserts that "the intrinsic values of the human person stand above other values. The personal rights and dignity of individuals are held to be inviolate." In an effort to maintain these principles, guidelines have been established regarding the rights of students, faculty, and staff who are HIV infected or have AIDS. The DePaul University guidelines are available throughout the University at the libraries, college offices, Student Affairs Office and the University Counseling Center.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.

Endorsements Policy

DePaul's reputation and stature make it an attractive partner for many organizations and entities, but some uses of DePaul's name by others may not always promote the purposes of the university. All members of the university and the institution as a whole benefit when its name is well used and suffer when it is ill used.

The university takes a legitimate interest in the use of its name and logos for at least three reasons:

- The university and its members have a responsibility to ensure that any implied association with the university is accurate.
- Attaching the DePaul name to an event, project or publication implies a close connection with the university, usually sponsorship or endorsement. For example, such forms as the "DePaul Project on..." or the "DePaul University Guide to..." should be used only when they refer to activities for which the university itself or one of its delegated authorities is accountable. Involvement by individual faculty, students or staff members is not, by itself, a sufficient basis to title an activity as "DePaul" sponsored. Rather the activity must be one for which the university takes institutional responsibility.
- The university and its members have a responsibility to ensure that the activities with which it is accurately associated maintain standards consistent with its educational purposes.

In academic endeavors under the supervision and control of university departments, centers, institutes, or programs, adherence to these standards is assured through the normal processes of review. In other activities, relevant standards of quality and appropriateness should be established and maintained. Even some projects that satisfy the standards of quality may not appropriately use the university name (for example, partisan political activities or outside ventures carried on by individual faculty, students or staff members; see Faculty Handbook).

The university and its members have a responsibility to protect its assets by seeking a fair share of the economic value that the use of the DePaul name produces.

"DePaul University" has become a widely known and respected trademark. The commercial fruits of this fortunate reputation are largely attributable to the contributions of many generations of faculty, students and staff. Therefore they should be allocated for the benefit of the university as a whole. Any use of the DePaul name that may deprecate its long-term value should be avoided.

In accord with these responsibilities, the following standards regulate the use of the DePaul name by schools, units and individuals within the university as well as their use by individuals and institutions outside the university, as authorized.

The use regulated by this policy refers to the identification, statement or display of DePaul's name in any way that may reasonably be interpreted as implying endorsement, approval or sponsorship by the university or one of its units. Nothing in this policy is intended to discourage fair use of DePaul's name to comment on activities of the university or any of its units.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.
Drug Free Workplace and Legal Drinking Age Compliance

Institutions receiving federal financial assistance are required to develop and distribute to faculty, staff, students, and others, a public statement certifying compliance with the Drug Free Workplace Act and the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act.

The State of Illinois prohibits the sale, use, or possession, of alcoholic beverages by persons who are under 21 years of age.

This policy states DePaul's commitment to maintain a drug free workplace and restrict the consumption of alcohol at university events, including classes, to persons 21 years or older.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.

Anti-Discrimination and Anti-Harrassment Policy and Procedures

The Anti-Discrimination and Anti-Harassment Policy provides the overall philosophy and specific approaches for addressing discrimination, harassment, and/or related retaliation issues. It serves to augment other university-wide policies and is in accordance with federal, state, and local laws and regulations. The Anti-Discrimination and Anti-Harassment Policy combines and replaces the predecessor Sexual Harassment Policy and the Anti-Discriminatory Harassment Policy. The Anti-Discrimination and Anti-Harassment Policy encompasses the University's Section 504 Grievance Procedures.

It is the policy of DePaul University that no person shall be the object of discrimination or harassment on the basis of race, color, ethnicity, religion, sex, gender, sexual orientation, national origin, age, marital status, parental status, family relationship status, physical or mental disability, military status, or other status protected by local, state, or federal law in its employment or its educational settings. DePaul University reserves the right to take actions that are consistent with its policies and procedures to deal with individuals found to have engaged in harassment, discrimination and/or retaliation in violation of this policy.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.

Acceptable Use Policy/ Network Security

This Policy defines guidelines for acceptable use of computing resources within the University and explains various violations of acceptable use. This Policy is intended to promote a greater computer and network security posture for DePaul University.

For the entire policy please check the University Secretary's website.
Clery Act

DePaul University complies with its reporting obligations pursuant to the Clery Act. Any information regarding Clery Act reports and reporting can be obtained at Public Safety.

Emergency Contacts

In an emergency situation, the University reserves the right to contact a student's parent, legal guardian, spouse, and/or other designated emergency contact.

Drug Free Schools and Community Act

DePaul University complies with the requirements of the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act. The University shall review its compliance on a biennial basis to determine its effectiveness and to ensure that the standards of conduct and conduct sanctions have been consistently enforced. This review shall be documented in a report.

Standards of Conduct: The unlawful possession, use, distribution, sale or manufacture of controlled substances is prohibited on any premises owned or controlled by DePaul University. Under no circumstance will the University tolerate unlawful possession, use, distribution, sale or manufacture of controlled substances or the unlawful use of alcohol on campus or at University-sponsored activities.

Conduct Sanctions: Students who violate these Standards of Conduct will be subject to conduct action up to and including expulsion, in accordance with university policy, the Code of Student Responsibility, and the Student Conduct Process. A conduct sanction for violating this policy may include the completion of an appropriate intervention program.

Programs for Students Requiring Assistance: Any DePaul student who has a drug or alcohol related problem may call upon the University for assistance. Anyone needing help should contact the Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention Specialist in the Office of Health Promotion and Wellness. This professional can provide a confidential referral to a drug or alcohol treatment program.

Health Risks: The use of drugs and alcohol can have a substantial and detrimental effect on health. These effects are often permanent and can lead to severe physical and psychological impairment, disability and premature death. Information on the effects of drugs and alcohol is available through the Office of Health Promotion and Wellness, University Counseling Services, the Ray Meyer Fitness Center and Sage Medical/ DePaul Health Services.

Legal Sanctions: Use of illicit drugs by any person is illegal under both the state and federal statutes. Use of alcohol by persons under 21 years of age is illegal under state law. Penalties for conviction under state and federal law include incarceration and fines. Property used in connection with illegal drugs may be confiscated. Federal student loans and grants may be denied to those convicted for a violation of a criminal drug statute.

Students should also consult the Alcohol policy and the Drug Free Workplace & Legal Drinking Age Compliance Policy. This policy can be found in the Undergraduate Student Handbook and on the University Secretary's website.

Also review Drug Free Workplace and Legal Drinking Age Compliance.
Information Regarding Registered Sex Offenders

If you would like information regarding registered sex offenders enrolled or employed at DePaul University, please visit the Office of Public Safety.

Involuntary Withdrawal

DePaul University places the utmost priority on student welfare and community safety. When a student demonstrates conduct that violates DePaul’s Code of Student Responsibility or other DePaul policies, that conduct will be addressed through the appropriate disciplinary processes. This Policy is not intended to be disciplinary in nature. Rather, this Policy outlines the criteria and procedures for when and how a student may be involuntarily withdrawn from the University for demonstrating behavior that creates a direct threat to the safety or health of the student or others or that unreasonably disrupts the normal education processes and orderly operation of the University. There may be situations in which both this Policy and the Code of Student Responsibility and/or other DePaul policies are applicable.

Criteria

A student may be involuntarily withdrawn from DePaul if the University determines, in accordance with the procedures listed below, that the student:

(a) Demonstrates behavior that is unreasonably disruptive to the normal education processes and orderly operation of the University;

(b) Demonstrates behavior that endangers him/herself, or;

(c) Demonstrates behavior that endangers others or that creates a direct threat that the student may endanger others.

Determination

The involuntary withdrawal process begins when the Dean of Students Office receives a referral or other information regarding a student who appears to be demonstrating behavior consistent with one or more of the criteria listed above. If, after reviewing the information received, a staff member in the Dean of Students Office (typically, an Assistant Dean) determines that the student has demonstrated behavior consistent with one or more of the criteria for involuntary withdrawal from the University as stated above, the staff member will inform the student of this determination. At the time of this communication, the staff member will inform any student who is involuntarily withdrawn about the student's right to appeal the decision to the Dean of Students, and will explain to the student the conditions for returning to the DePaul community (see below).

Prior to proceeding with the involuntarily withdrawal process, the staff member will always encourage the student to voluntarily withdraw.

Appeal

A student may appeal the staff member's determination regarding involuntary withdrawal (or the designated conditions for readmission following an involuntary withdrawal) to the Dean of Students. A student has five (5) business days to request this appeal. Within five (5) business days of being received by the University, the Dean of Students shall review all the available information (i.e.—all of the information made available to the Dean of Students Office and any additional information subsequently made available by the student), and shall, if deemed necessary by the Dean of Students, have the opportunity to ask the student additional questions.

After reviewing all the available information described above, the Dean of Students shall assess whether the student has or has not met the criteria for involuntary withdrawal from the University as stated above. The decision of the Dean of Students will promptly be communicated to the student in writing. This decision is final.
Interim Suspension Pending Appeal

A student who demonstrates behavior that creates an immediate direct threat to him/herself or others, or who demonstrates behavior that is immediately and significantly disruptive to the normal education processes and orderly operation of the University, may be suspended from the University on an interim basis pending an appeal.

All decisions regarding interim suspensions pending appeals will be made by the appropriate staff within the Dean of Students Office in consultation with the Dean of Students and/or Vice President for Student Affairs.

Effect of Involuntary Withdrawal

Students who have been involuntarily withdrawn from the University are generally not permitted to be on University premises or participate in University events. However, a student who has been involuntarily withdrawn or suspended on an interim basis pending an appeal may be on campus, with the permission of the Dean of Students and/or the Vice President for Student Affairs, for the purposes of participating in the processes detailed in this Policy or as otherwise required and appropriate in the discretion of the Dean of Students and/or the Vice President for Student Affairs.

Students are responsible for contacting appropriate University offices in order to ensure that their academic and financial affairs are in order (including any on-campus housing). All determinations as to the effect of an involuntary withdrawal in these areas will be made by the applicable offices in accordance with existing University policies.

Returning to Campus—Conditions for Readmission

A student who has satisfied the conditions for readmission outlined at the time of his or her involuntary withdrawal will be considered for readmission to the University.

Readmission conditions will be individually-tailored so as to be appropriate to each student but will always be premised on the notion that the student is no longer a direct threat to him/herself or others, and/or no longer demonstrates behavior that is disruptive to the normal educational processes and orderly operation of the University. Specific conditions for readmission might include:

(a) Appropriate documentation indicating that the student no longer demonstrates the behavior which led to the involuntary withdrawal;

(b) A treatment plan from a mental health professional or other appropriate care provider and/or verification from the provider that the student is complying with a treatment plan (or has been satisfactorily complying with a treatment plan for a designated length of time);

Students wishing to be readmitted must schedule a face-to-face meeting with the Dean of Students to discuss the student's compliance with, and appropriate documentation of, the designated conditions for readmission. All determinations as to whether the conditions for readmission have been satisfied will be made by the Dean of Students. These determinations are final.

Because conduct that gives rise to an involuntary withdrawal under this Policy might also result in sanctions in accordance with the Code of Student Responsibility, it is possible that a student who has met the designated conditions for readmission following an involuntary withdrawal might still not be eligible for re-enrollment at DePaul due to student conduct sanctions (similarly, it is possible that a student who has satisfied all student conduct sanctions might still not be eligible for re-enrollment at DePaul because of an inability to meet the designated conditions for readmission in accordance with this Policy).

The Dean of Students or their designee may make such reasonable exceptions to this Policy and these procedures as circumstances may require for the welfare of the institution and/or the involved student(s), provided that fundamental elements of fairness and due process are observed.
Speakers Guidelines

DePaul University encourages its recognized student organizations to sponsor guest speakers whose presentation will contribute to the role of the university as a forum for intellectual discussion, debate, investigation and/or artistic expression. Through this forum, speakers bring to the University an opportunity for students to hear and discuss opposing viewpoints on a wide range of issues. It should be understood that providing a forum in no way implies DePaul approval or endorsement of the views expressed by the sponsored speaker. A statement indicating that the presence of the speaker on campus does not imply that DePaul has approved or endorse the views expressed by the speaker must be included in all publications for and advertising about the event.

Student Organizations

The University supports and encourages student organizations in a variety of areas including scholarly, ethnic, honorary, University-sponsored, Greek and special interest. The University recognizes the value and contribution that student organizations make in a student’s total college experience and education. DePaul’s Recognition Policy and Procedures is a formal system used to maintain the quality and high standards of our current organizations. Recognition as a student organization accords certain rights and responsibilities. These rights and responsibilities are defined in the recognition policy along with the requirements for new student organization recognition, renewal of recognition status for current organizations and loss of recognition of current student organizations. It is each student organization’s responsibility to become familiar with this policy as it applies to all organizations. This policy may be obtained from the Office of Student Life. University-sponsored organizations will have an advisor appointed by the University. All other organizations will select their own faculty or staff advisor with the approval of the Office of Student Life. Any off-campus action of any recognized student organization is the sole responsibility of the student organization and its officers. In compliance with the reporting requirements of the Clery Act and Campus Security Act, an officer of the organization must file a report of any off-campus crimes (as defined by the act) with the Dean of Students Office within 24 hours of said offense.

Student Organizations are expected to adhere to all applicable institutional regulations. The University reserves the right to determine the appropriate time, place, content, and manner for conducting activities, and posting and distribution of materials on any of its campuses. Consequently, the University may deny or restrict the activities of student organizations. Student organizations are expected to exercise good judgment in planning and promoting their activities. Failure to do so may result in conduct action being initiated against the organization; consequently, policies, procedures and sanctions set forth within the Code of Student Responsibility apply to student organizations collectively as well as to individual students. The Office of Student Involvement will work in conjunction with the Dean of Students Office in any conduct action.

Title IX Information for Students

As required by Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, DePaul University prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in its education programming and activities. DePaul’s Dean of Students is the primary Title IX coordinator for DePaul University. Any student seeking to file a Title IX complaint (meaning a complaint based on sexual violence, sexual harassment, or other sex discrimination) can do so through the Dean of Students Office, the Office of Institutional Diversity and Equity, or through Public Safety. As appropriate, the Dean of Students works with other offices to address Title IX complaints and other Title IX compliance issues. These offices include the Office of Institutional Diversity and Equity (sexual harassment complaints involving faculty and staff), Human Resources (certain complaints involving employees), and Athletics (athletics Title IX compliance).
Student Rights Within the Student Conduct Process

A student participating in the Conduct Process is entitled to the following rights as a guarantee of fundamental fairness:

1. An opportunity for a hearing in order to answer charges of alleged misconduct.
2. A written statement of the alleged violations in sufficient enough detail to enable the complainant and referred student(s) to prepare.
3. The right to be accompanied by an Advisor. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Advisors.)
4. For the complainant and referred student(s), a written statement of the possible sanctions that may be imposed.
5. The right to submit Witnesses on one's behalf and, to the extent necessary, to question Witnesses' statements, whether verbally or in writing. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Witnesses.)
6. The right to have the Student Conduct Process explained and to ask for clarification of any policies or procedures.
7. The right to reasonable access to information specific to one's case.
8. The right to a separate hearing when a single incident gives rise to charges against more than one student.
9. The right to speak on one's own behalf.
10. The right to disqualify a member of any University Board or Administrative Hearing Officer for justifiable reason.
11. The right to have proceedings and documentation kept confidential. All hearings, proceedings and case information are considered confidential except to those who have a legitimate educational interest in them, or as permitted or required under FERPA, the Clery Act, or any other legal mandate.
12. The right to a written decision, which the University will take reasonable measures to provide within five business days of completion of the last hearing.
13. The right to request an appeal on specific grounds.
14. The right for any student registered with the Center for Students with Disabilities to request accommodations to ensure their full and equal participation in any conduct process and/or proceeding. Accommodation requests are to be made directly to the Dean of Students Office. Accommodations are determined on an individual basis in consultation with the Center for Students with Disabilities.

Student Organization Rights Within the Student Conduct Process

A Student Organization participating in the Conduct Process is entitled to the following rights as a guarantee of fundamental fairness:

1. An opportunity for a hearing in order to answer charges of alleged misconduct.
2. A written statement of the alleged violations in sufficient enough detail to enable the referred organization to prepare a response.
3. The right to be accompanied by an Advisor. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Advisors.)
4. For the referred organization, a written statement of the possible sanctions that may be imposed.
5. The right to submit Witnesses on the organization’s behalf and, to the extent necessary, to question Witnesses’ statements, whether verbally or in writing. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Witnesses.)
6. The right to have the Student Conduct Process explained and to ask for clarification of any policies or procedures.
7. The right to reasonable access to information specific to an organization's case.
8. The right to a separate hearing when a single incident gives rise to charges against more than one organization.
9. The right to speak on the organization’s behalf.
10. The right to disqualify a member of any University Board for justifiable reason.
11. The right to have proceedings and documentation kept confidential. All hearings, proceedings and case information are considered confidential except to those who have a legitimate educational interest in them, or as permitted or required under FERPA, the Clery Act, or any other legal mandate. Individual students’ records are protected by federal law and University policy. However, sanctions and outcomes for Student Organizations that do not contain personally-identifiable student information are generally not protected under FERPA.

12. The right to a written decision, which the University will take reasonable measures to provide within five business days of completion of the last hearing.

13. The right to request an appeal on specific grounds.

14. The right for any student registered with the Center for Students with Disabilities to request accommodations to ensure their full and equal participation in any conduct process and/or proceeding. Accommodation requests are to be made directly to the Dean of Students Office. Accommodations are determined on an individual basis in consultation with the Center for Students with Disabilities.

University Rights Within the Student Conduct Process

The University reserves the right to:

1. Refer any case involving a violation of criminal or civil law to the proper law enforcement agency.

2. Pursue conduct action against a student on behalf of the University based on reliable information from a member of the DePaul community indicating that a violation of the Code of Student Responsibility or other DePaul policy may have taken place.

3. Exercise jurisdiction for an offense committed on-campus. Additionally, the University may exercise jurisdiction for an offense committed by a student off-campus (including on-line communities) when:
   1. the victim of such offense is a member of the campus community (student, staff, faculty); or
   2. the offense occurred at a college-sponsored or sanctioned event; or
   3. the student used his or her status as a member of the University community to assist in the commission of the offense (for example, using a student ID card to pass a bad check); or
   4. the offense affects the University.

   (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Jurisdiction.)

4. Suspend or otherwise sanction a student on an interim basis in accordance with the procedures described below.

5. Share the outcomes of the Student Conduct Process with those members of the University community who have a legitimate educational interest in them, or as permitted or required under FERPA, the Clery Act, or any other legal mandate.

6. In keeping with its commitment to offer a fundamentally fair process for all students involved in the Student Conduct Process, adapt certain aspects of the Student Conduct Process in specific circumstances, in order to meet the interests of all involved parties, including the University.

Other University Processes Including Residential Education

In general, the Dean of Students Office is responsible for managing the Student Conduct Process. However, other University departments may initiate investigations, manage hearing processes, or impose sanctions in accordance with other University policies and procedures, and in consultation with the Dean of Students Office and Student Affairs when appropriate. Examples of other areas that may initiate investigations, manage hearing processes, or impose sanctions in accordance with other University policies and procedures include Internal Audit and the Office of Institutional Diversity and Equity.

Students should be particularly aware that Residential Education maintains a separate conduct system for violations of Residential Education policies and, as appropriate, violations of other policies that occur in DePaul housing. Students should consult Residence Education for information regarding those policies and procedures, including information on how to file a complaint with Residential Education.
Student Conduct Records

Records of Student Conduct cases that result in sanctions under this Student Conduct Hearing Process shall be kept in a referred student's conduct file located in the Dean of Students Office. Student conduct records are destroyed ten years after graduation or a student's last date of attendance. Students who are suspended or dismissed from the University will have a notation placed permanently on their transcripts and the case files related to the suspension or dismissal will be retained permanently. The University will not release conduct records except to those who have a legitimate educational interest in them, or as permitted or required under FERPA, the Clery Act, or any other legal mandate.

General Information about the Student Conduct Process

Initiating a Complaint

A student conduct action may be initiated by any member of the DePaul community (student, faculty, or staff) who feels that they have been adversely affected by a student's actions in violation of the Code of Student Responsibility or other policy, or who has reasonable cause to believe that a student has violated the Code of Student Responsibility or other policy.

Complaints shall be made in writing to the Dean of Students Office or other appropriate office.

Relationship Between the Student Conduct Process & Legal Proceedings

A student may be subject to the Student Conduct Process in addition to any civil or criminal proceedings. The University, in its sole discretion, will make the decision whether or not to delay the Student Conduct Process until the conclusion of any civil or criminal action associated with a complaint. If a referred student chooses not to participate in the Student Conduct Process because of a pending legal action, the hearing officer may render a decision based solely on the written documentation and/or the complainant's testimony available at the time without the benefit of information from the referred student.

The Student Conduct Process is designed to be educational, not legal, in nature. Rules of evidence and discovery do not apply to the Student Conduct Process. Students should not draw parallel interpretations between the Code of Student Responsibility or other DePaul policies and criminal or civil law. The outcome of a legal proceeding is not determinative on the Student Conduct Process.

Delivery of Written Notices

All written notices regarding student conduct actions will be delivered personally or via the postal service or email. It is a student's responsibility to ensure that their information (including address, phone number and email) is current in Campus Connect.

Investigation

When the university is made aware of a potential violation of the Code of Student Responsibility, it may be necessary for appropriate staff members to conduct an investigation prior to referring the incident to the Student Conduct Process. Such investigations are either conducted by or in collaboration with the Dean of Students Office. Staff charged with conducting an investigation may gather information, conduct interviews, and solicit materials. Investigations will be conducted with all reasonable speed. At the conclusion of the investigation, an investigator submits all materials to the Dean of Students Office who will determine whether the Student Conduct Process will begin. A student may choose to have an Advisor at any meeting related to an investigation.

Initial Review

Upon a written complaint that an alleged violation has occurred, the Dean of Students Office or other designated office shall conduct an initial review.

At the time of the initial review, the student will be given the following:

- A written statement of the alleged violations in sufficient enough detail to enable the student to prepare.
- Reasonable access to information specific to one's case.
- An explanation of, and opportunity to ask questions about the Student Conduct Process, including (a) an explanation of the two hearing possibilities (Administrative Hearing and University Board Hearing) and the University's determination as to which type of hearing will be conducted; (b) an explanation of "Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process;" (c) an explanation of possible sanctions; and (d) an explanation of appeal procedures.
- Instructions on how to schedule the appropriate hearing.
- Information regarding any interim sanctions, if applicable.

The initial review will include a determination as to whether the University has jurisdiction over the violation. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Jurisdiction.) This initial review could consist of requesting additional information from the complainant or referred student, or otherwise collecting additional information. This initial review is intended only to provide information pertinent to the incident under review and is not designed to result in a binding decision. The designated reviewer will take reasonable measures to ensure that the initial review is completed within five business days of the date of written complaint that a violation has occurred. However, the University reserves the right to extend this time limit, in its sole discretion, in order to ensure a proper initial review of all relevant material.

If the referred student acknowledges that a violation, or the conduct giving rise to a violation, has occurred at any time during the initial review, the process may immediately move to the sanction process. These sanctions may be appealed in accordance with the procedures detailed in the Conduct Appeals Procedures.

Initiating a Hearing

If, after the initial review, the designated reviewer determines that there is not reasonable cause to believe that the allegation has occurred, the review shall promptly cease and the Student Conduct Process will not move forward.

If, after the initial review, the designated reviewer determines that there is reasonable cause to believe that a violation of policy has occurred, the Student Conduct Process will move forward.

Interim Sanctions

In order to protect the health, safety, security and well-being of the University community and its members, the University reserves the right to immediately impose interim sanctions upon a student when it determines, in its sole discretion, that the continued presence of the referred student does any of the following:

1. constitutes a threat to the safety or well-being of the referred student, any other member of the University community, or any invited guest;
2. risks destruction of property; or
3. risks disruption of classroom or other campus activities.

The University will take reasonable measures to ensure that any student suspended or otherwise sanctioned on an interim basis shall have a final determination of the charges made through appropriate hearing procedures within ten business days of such suspension. However, the University reserves the right to extend this time limit, in its sole discretion, in order to ensure proper review of all relevant material. During this time the referred student shall forfeit those rights and privileges as the University deems appropriate. Should it be found that the student did not commit the act(s), the interim sanction shall be revoked.

Prior Record of Sanctions

Because a student's prior record of conduct will be used as a basis for more stringent conduct action, previous sanctioned violations in the student's conduct file may be considered before assigning any conduct sanction(s). Any previously imposed sanctions may provide additional justification that more progressive action is necessary to ensure that the student understands the full impact his/her pattern of behavior is having on the DePaul community.

Failure to Participate

Failure of a student to agree to, appear at, or participate in a hearing, or to otherwise disrupt the normal hearing process, may in itself constitute a violation. The University reserves the right to pursue this additional violation in the same or a separate hearing. If a referred student chooses not to have the hearing process explained, chooses not to participate in the hearing process, or otherwise fails to appear at a hearing, the hearing officer may render a decision and if appropriate, impose sanctions based solely on the information available at the time without the benefit of information from the referred student. These sanctions may be appealed in accordance with the procedures detailed in Conduct Appeals Procedures.

Standard for Hearing Determinations

The standard of "whether it is more likely than not" that the student is in violation of the policy(ies) at issue will be the basis for determining findings and imposing any sanctions. A finding of "IN VIOLATION" means that, based on the information available at the time, it is more likely than not that the student is in violation of the policy(ies) at issue. A finding of "NOT IN VIOLATION" means that, based on the information available at the time, it is more likely than not that the student is not in violation of the policy(ies) at issue.

Additional Procedures Regarding Sexual and Relationship Violence

Please also refer to the Sexual & Relationship Violence Prevention and Response policy for additional procedural information for Student Conduct Process matters involving a potential violation of that policy.

Administrative Hearing Process

If the University determines that an Administrative Hearing is appropriate, the University will take reasonable measures to ensure that the first session of the Administrative Hearings takes place within five business days of when a referred student is first notified of the conduct charge. However, the University reserves the right to extend this time limit, in its sole discretion, in order to ensure a proper review of all relevant material. A mutually convenient time for the Administrative Hearing will be decided upon. If necessary, and at the discretion of the Administrative Hearing Officer, an Administrative Hearing may take place over the telephone and/or video conferencing.

The actual Administrative Hearing will proceed as follows:

1. The incident report(s) will be reviewed by the Administrative Hearing officer.
2. The Administrative Hearing officer and student will discuss the alleged violation(s) that occurred.
3. The student will have an opportunity to give a statement about the incident, including an admission or denial of the alleged violations.
4. The student will submit Witness names to give statements and be questioned by the Administrative Hearing officer. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Witnesses.)
5. The Administrative Hearing officer will review any relevant information and discuss the incident with the student.
6. After the Administrative Hearing officer has examined all of the information and heard from all of the approved Witnesses, the Administrative Hearing officer will determine that the student is or is not in violation of the Code expectation or other policy outlined.
7. If the Administrative Hearing officer finds the student in violation, they will determine the appropriate sanctions. Any sanctions imposed become effective immediately unless otherwise stipulated. Sanctions imposed by an Administrative Hearing officer may be appealed in accordance with the procedures detailed in the Conduct Appeals Procedures. Students will be informed of these Conduct Appeals Procedures, including to whom a request for an appeal should be directed, at the conclusion of the Administrative Hearing. The University will take reasonable measures to notify the complainant and referred student of the outcome and sanctions in writing within five business days of the last session of an Administrative Hearing. However, the University reserves the right to extend this time limit, in its sole discretion, in order to ensure a proper review of all relevant material. The University will place all appropriate information in the referred student's conduct file.

The Administrative Hearing officer will hold as many meetings as necessary to ensure a fair disposition of the case. If a referred student fails to attend an Administrative Hearing or otherwise participate in the process, the Administrative Hearing officer may decide the case based on the information available at the time. Any imposed sanctions will be effective immediately unless otherwise stipulated.

DePaul University  Autumn 2015-2016  Page 2500 of 2506
University Board Hearing Process

If the University determines that a University Board Hearing is appropriate, the Moderator (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Moderators.) will take reasonable measures to ensure that the referred student is notified of the following within five business days; however, the University reserves the right to extend this time limit, in its sole discretion, in order to ensure a proper review of all relevant material:

1. The nature of the alleged violation(s) made against the student.
2. A copy of the University Board Hearing procedures.
3. The time, date and location of the University Board Hearing.

The complainant and referred student(s) have the right to show cause to the Moderator as to why any member of the University Board pool should be removed because of possible prejudice. If a student wishes to have a member of the University Board pool removed, the student must notify the Moderator in writing at least two business days prior to the first scheduled University Board Hearing. Any member of the University Board pool has an obligation to disqualify him/herself if he/she has any personal interest in the case.

The moderator will set a date by which all materials for the conduct hearing will be sent to the University Board. Materials turned into the Moderator after that date will be sent to the University Board if feasible.

Reasonable efforts will be made to have the first session of the University Board Hearing within seven business days after the referred student has been notified of the above. However, the University reserves the right to extend this time limit, in its sole discretion, in order to ensure a proper review of all relevant material.

At the discretion of the University Board, more than one hearing session may be necessary before a final determination is made.

The actual University Board Hearing will proceed as follows:

1. The Chairperson convenes and presides over the University Board Hearing only if the appropriate quorum is present. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—University Boards.) The Chairperson is also charged with maintaining orderly discussion throughout the University Board Hearing, generally limiting testimony per session to a maximum of three hours and ensuring that there is equal time for both the complainant and the referred student to present their information.
2. The Chairperson acknowledges the Advisors. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Advisors.)
3. The Chairperson confirms that the referred student understands his/her rights.
4. The Chairperson reads into the record the University's opening statement and all statements of alleged violation(s).
5. The Chairperson or Moderator will ensure that the referred student(s) and complainant(s) have copies of all incident reports.
6. The complainant makes a statement or, in cases where the University is bringing the action, a University representative will present the University's case. The opening statement by the complainant may be read aloud or be submitted in writing for the University Board.
7. The referred student makes an opening statement, including an admission or denial of the charges. The opening statement by the referred student may be read aloud by the student or may be submitted in writing for the University Board.
8. Witnesses and/or other information is presented. Witnesses will be presented one at a time. A Witness can only be present at the University Board Hearing during his/her own testimony. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Witnesses.)
9. Members of the University Board, the Moderator, the referred student and the complainant may question any Witness who is present. All questions must be directed to the Chairperson. The Chairperson may rule any question out of order.
10. Written testimony from Witnesses unable to be at the University Board Hearing may be accepted but its validity will be ruled on by the Chairperson. (See Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process—Witnesses.)
11. The University Board may recall any Witness it wishes to question further.
12. Members of the University Board may ask questions to the complainant and the referred student. At this time the complainant and the referred student may also question each other. All questions must be directed to the Chairperson. The Chairperson may rule any question out of order.
13. After all Witnesses, information, and testimony have been presented, the Chairperson will ask each side if there is any additional information pertaining to the case that has not been heard or submitted in writing.
14. Closing statements of no longer than five minutes may be made by the referred student and complainant. Closing statements by either party may be read aloud by the student or may be submitted in writing for the University Board.
15. At this point, all are dismissed except for the Chairperson, University Board members and the Moderator.
The University Board determines if the student is or is not in violation of the Code expectation or other policy outlined. If the referred student is to be found in violation, the University Board shall determine the appropriate sanction(s). A simple majority vote by the board members will determine all outcomes. All decisions will be reviewed with the Moderator, who will share with the University Board a referred student's prior record of sanctions as appropriate. When deliberations have been completed, the Chairperson invites the referred student back into the room and announces the University Board's decision. Any sanctions imposed become effective immediately unless otherwise stipulated. All imposed sanctions shall become effective immediately at the completion of the hearing unless otherwise stipulated. Sanctions may be appealed in accordance with the procedures detailed in Conduct Appeals Procedures.

Conduct Sanctions

The Student Conduct Process is an educational one by which the University strives to instill in its students an understanding that they are responsible for their actions. When a student fails to uphold the responsibilities outlined in the Code of Student Responsibility or other policies, the University has an obligation to help them come to a deeper understanding of how their behavior impacts the campus environment.

There are several reasons for imposing conduct sanctions:

1. To redirect a student's or organization's behavior toward a standard more acceptable for members of the University community;
2. To protect the University community from possible harm or injury;
3. To require restitution for University property that is lost, stolen or damaged; and
4. To give support for financial redress to a victim for loss, harm or destruction of his/her personal property.

If, after an Administrative Hearing or University Board Hearing has taken place, there is sufficient information that a violation has occurred, the hearing officer(s) may impose the appropriate sanction(s).

All imposed sanctions shall become effective immediately at the completion of the hearing unless otherwise stipulated.

The following is a list of sanctions that the University may impose on a student, group of students or student organization:

1. University Reprimand: A University reprimand does not necessarily restrict the student in any way but does signify that any further violation may result in additional conduct sanctions. A written record of the reprimand will be placed in the student's conduct file.
2. University Censure: University Censure indicates to the student that further violations will result in more serious consequences. University censure usually is given for a specified period of time not to exceed one year. This level of sanction may include restriction of activities and/or ineligibility to receive financial assistance from a University source.
3. No Contact Restriction – A no contact restriction denotes that the student is prohibited from having any contact with a particular person or persons. This contact includes but is not limited to: in person, email, text message, instant message, the internet, phone, or through other people. This contact may include any university gatherings on or off campus.
4. University Probation: University probation is a written statement to the student indicating that the student's behavior is of such a nature as to jeopardize continued enrollment at the University. University probation can be for a specified period of time or for as long as the student is enrolled. Any behavioral infraction during the probationary period may cause the student to be removed from the University.

5. Suspension: A suspended student must carry out a total and immediate separation from the University for a required period of time and/or until particular conditions for readmission are met. Suspension may include various prohibitions regarding a student's ability to be on University property or participate in University activities. A sanction of suspension shall be permanently noted on a student's transcript, regardless of whether or not the student is successfully readmitted. At the end of the suspension period and/or once the student can demonstrate that the conditions for readmission have been met, the student may be required to meet with the Dean of Students or other designee before being readmitted to the University.

6. Dismissal: Dismissal constitutes a permanent and immediate separation from the University. The imposition of this sanction shall be permanently noted on the student's transcript and is a permanent bar to their readmission to DePaul University. Dismissal may include various prohibitions regarding a student's ability to be on University property or participate in University activities.

Any of the above sanctions may be combined with one or more of the following actions in order to more fully address all issues involved in a conduct case:

1. Restitution or Assessment: A student who damages University property may be required to pay actual repair or replacement costs. Failure to pay may result in withholding of the student's records and/or additional conduct sanctions.
2. Educational Projects: An educational project designed to assist the student in better understanding the overall impact of his/her behavioral infraction(s) may be imposed. Such assigned projects might include research papers, the creation of educational materials, or the planning and/or presentation of educational programs related to the policy infraction. Assigned projects may not include physical labor unless they are directly related to the violations(s) and do not cause humiliation or degradation to the student.
3. Restriction: Restrictions upon a student's University privileges may be imposed for a set period of time. These restrictions may include, but are not limited to, denial of the right to represent the University in any way, access to facilities or individuals, parking privileges, and/or participation in co-curricular activities.

The sanctions of Residence Hall Probation and Removal from the Residence Halls may also be imposed through the Conduct Review Process on students who live in DePaul housing. Additionally, because Residential Education maintains a separate conduct system for violations of Residential Education policies and, as appropriate, violations of other policies that occur in DePaul housing, students should consult Residential Education for information as to when a student can be placed on probation in, or be removed, from DePaul housing.

Students who are removed from DePaul housing will be subject to all of the policies and procedures set forth by Residential Education and Housing Services. Students should consult these departments for more information.

Conduct Appeal Procedures

Both complainants and referred students have the right to request an appeal on specified grounds. The reason for an appeal is to guarantee that the situation has been resolved through a fundamentally fair hearing in accordance with established policies and procedures.

A complainant and referred student may only request to appeal the determination or sanction on the following three grounds:

1. A substantial procedural error occurred that unreasonably impaired the ability to achieve a fair process or final decision and made the process or the final decision fundamentally unfair;
2. New information of substantive nature, impossible for the hearing officer to have heard at the time of the hearing, has been discovered and it would be fundamentally unfair for the Administrative Hearing Officer or University Board to not consider the information; or
3. The initial sanction(s) are fundamentally unfair or inappropriate.

In order to request an appeal, the complainant and/or referred student must submit a written request for appeal to the designated office within five business days of being notified of the initial decision. Complainants and referred students will be notified at the conclusion of a hearing who is the designated University representative to submit their request for an appeal. Typically, requests for appeals from University Board Hearings will be submitted to the Dean of Students, while requests for appeals from Administrative Hearings will be submitted to the supervisor of the Administrative Hearing Officer. The individual designated to review the appeal request may decide that the sanctions imposed should be suspended pending the outcome of the appeal. Complainant and Referred students should understand, however, that, unless otherwise stipulated, sanctions are considered in effect once a hearing is completed, regardless of whether an appeal is requested.

The individual designated to review the request for an appeal will make a determination that:

1. The request for an appeal is denied because none of the grounds for an appeal above have been met; or
2. The request for an appeal is granted because one or more of the grounds for an appeal have been met.

The designated reviewer will take reasonable measures to notify the complainant and/or referred students of the appeal determination within five business days of when the University receives the request for an appeal. However, the University reserves the right to extend this time limit, in its sole discretion, in order to ensure a proper review of all relevant material.

If a request for an appeal is granted, then the individual designated to review the request for an appeal will determine whether the matter can be resolved without a new hearing (for example, modification of sanctions so that they are not fundamentally unfair or inappropriate) or whether new hearing is necessary. If a new hearing is necessary, the University will determine whether this hearing will be an Administrative Hearing or a University Board Hearing. All hearings that take place after an appeal has been granted will proceed in accordance with established procedures for Administrative Hearings and University Board Hearings.

All decisions regarding whether an appeal request will be granted are final. If the request for an appeal is denied, then all sanctions imposed will remain in effect.

Explanation of Important Aspects of the Student Conduct Process

Advisors

It is a student's right to bring one Advisor to a meeting related to an investigation, an Administrative Hearing, a University Board Hearing, or any other meeting included within the Student Conduct Process. This right applies to referred student(s), complaint(s) and witnesses. An Advisor must be a current member of the DePaul community (faculty, staff, or student). However, an Advisor cannot be a person who is involved in the same conduct matter being reviewed. All Advisors must be approved in advance of a scheduled meeting or hearing by the Moderator, Administrative Hearing Officer, or other University designee. Because an Advisor must be a current member of the DePaul community, students are prohibited from having an attorney or legal representative who is not a current member of the DePaul community be an Advisor during the Student Conduct Process. Students may choose to consult or retain independent legal counsel as a result of their participation in the Student Conduct Process, but such legal counsel may not attend any meetings or hearings related to the Student Conduct Process, and does not have a role in the Student Conduct Process.

The role of the Advisor is to act as a support person for the student by conferring quietly with the student. The Advisor is not to directly address the members of the University Board, an Administrative Hearing officer, or anyone else present at a meeting or hearing.

The Dean of Students retains a pool of faculty and staff that are trained to serve as Advisors for students and can be provided at the student's request. Furthermore, if a student selects an Advisor who is not part of this trained pool, the Dean of Students Office offers information and consultation on the role of the Advisor if needed and requested by the student or their Advisor.

For student conduct cases involving the Sexual & Relationship Violence Prevention and Response policy, please refer to the University Secretary's website for details regarding Advisors in the conduct process.

Hearings

There are two types of conduct hearings:

1. Administrative Hearing: An Administrative Hearing is a hearing in which the hearing officer is a University designee, such as the Dean of Students or another Student Affairs professional. The procedures for an Administrative Hearing are set forth above in the "Administrative Hearing Process" section. There is no Moderator for an Administrative Hearing.
2. University Board Hearing: A University Board Hearing is a hearing in which the hearing officers are selected from the University Board pool of members. The procedures for a University Board Hearing are set forth above in the "Conduct Hearing Process" section. The University Board Hearing process is managed by a Moderator.

The University will make the determination as to which type of hearing is appropriate in a particular situation.

University Boards

The members of the University Board pool are:

1. At least six current students with at least sophomore status appointed by the Student Government Association.
2. At least six faculty members appointed by the Faculty Council.
3. At least six staff members appointed by the Staff Council.

Three members (one from each constituency) will comprise the panel for a University Board Hearing. This panel shall be chosen by the Moderator prior to the University Board Hearing. The Chairperson shall be decided upon at the time of the University Board Hearing.

Student Affairs is responsible for training the pool of University Board members.

Students should consult Residential Education for information about hearing boards in the Residential Education conduct process.

Jurisdiction

The University may exercise jurisdiction (i.e.—initiate this Student Conduct Process) for all offenses committed on campus. Additionally, the University may exercise jurisdiction for an offense committed off-campus (including on-line communities) when:

1. The victim of such an offense is a member of the campus community (student, faculty, or staff); or
2. The offense occurred at a college-sponsored or sanctioned event; or
3. The referred student used his or her status as a member of the University community to assist in the commission of the offense (for example, using a student ID card to pass a bad check); or
4. The offense affects the University.

Moderators

All University Board Hearings will be assigned a Moderator. The Moderator may be the Dean of Students or another University designee (for example, other staff in the Dean of Students Office, or other Student Affairs professionals). The Moderator is responsible for managing the University Board Hearing process, including assisting with scheduling and selecting members from the University Board pool to participate in a hearing. The Moderator will be present at the University Board Hearing. The Moderator has no voting role in the outcome of any University Board Hearing, but all determinations by a University Board as to whether a violation has occurred or regarding sanctions must be reviewed with the Moderator.

There is no Moderator for an Administrative Hearing.

Witnesses

Students involved on either side of a conduct case, as complainants or referred students, may submit Witnesses for an Administrative Hearing or a University Board Hearing to support their statements. All Witnesses must be approved in advance by the University, and the University reserves the right to disallow any Witness. All Witnesses must generally be current members of the DePaul community (faculty, staff or students), except as otherwise approved by the University. Witness intended to present information that does not directly bear upon the circumstances of the case or duplicates all or part of testimony already presented may not be allowed. Appearance of Witnesses at the appropriate time, date and location of any hearing is the responsibility of the involved students. In some cases, the University will approve the use of written statements from Witnesses who are not available to appear at a hearing.

Witnesses will be presented one at a time. A Witness can only be present at a hearing during his/her own testimony.

The University recognizes it cannot compel any student to present him/herself as a Witness against his/her will. However, all students are encouraged to comply with the Student Conduct Process. Witnesses will be informed that giving false information may result in conduct action.
